New U.S. Law To Aid Labor Is Promised By Roosevelt

Breakdown in Workers' Pay, Hours Since NRA Death Cited.

Starvation Wages To End, He Avers

Pledges Action in Next Congress to Halt All Child Labor Abuse.

By Felix Bruner.

Something must be done to eliminate child labor, long hours and starvation wages in industry, President Roosevelt declared emphatically yesterday.

The President added that he did not believe the problem could be handled by the States and that he was certain it would require Federal action. He said he did not know whether a constitutional amendment would be necessary.

While warning against speculation as to what form proposed action would take, Mr. Roosevelt made it clear, legislation to that end could be expected during the coming session of Congress.

Confers With Hillman.

The President made his statement following a conference with Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Garment Workers and an official of the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Hillman, the President said, discussed with him the breakdown of maximum hour and minimum wage standards during the last year and a half. The NRA, under the codes, provided such standards in most industries and also prohibited child labor. It was invalidated by the Supreme Court in May, 1935.

The breakdown in labor standards has been constant and is increasing, the President said. As an example he cited an incident which occurred during his campaign. He said his automobile was stopped in front of a crowd in Massachusetts and that he saw the police force back into the throng a girl who attempted to hand him a note in an envelope. He said he told the late Gus Gennerich, his body guard, to get the envelope and bring it to him.

Aid Asked in Note.

The note, he said, contained a plea that he do something to help the girls employed in a garment factory in the vicinity. He said it explained that up to a few months ago the 150 girls employed in the factory had been receiving $11 a week, but that their wages had been cut to $4, $5 and $6 a week. It asked that the President do something to have the pay restored.

Mr. Roosevelt added that many people believed he had authority to act in such a situation but that he had no such authority. He said he turned the note over to the Labor Department and to the Massachusetts labor commissioner.

Obviously, he said, something should be done. He declined, however, to say whether he would make recommendations to Congress.

Labor conditions since the invalidation of the NRA have been under study by both Government and labor officials. The American Federation of Labor has constantly pointed out that there has been a breakdown in standards.

Labor Laws Voided.

The Supreme Court during its last session dealt several blows to labor, following the NRA decision. Perhaps the most notable was the decision invalidating the New York law which provided minimum standards for women in industry. Another was the Guffey law decision which held that the Government had no authority over the coal mining industry.

In the New York decision the court apparently shut the door to labor regulation by the States, as it had previously shut the door to such regulation by NRA. Following the decision, the President said, the court had created a no man's land in which apparently no authority could act.

At present the only attempt at Government regulation of hours and wages is contained in the Walsh-Healey law which orders that contractors selling to the Government must maintain minimum standards. Some difficulty has been experi-

Pope Pius XI On Deathbed, Church Fears

Pontiff's Heart Weakening, Digestive Organs Now Affected.

By the United Press.

Vatican City, Dec. 29.—Vatican authorities tonight abandoned hope that Pope Pius XI ever would be able to leave his bed again, even though he survives the crisis of his illness.

Alarm spread through the Vatican when it was revealed that the pontiff, who is in his eightieth year, was growing steadily worse.

No Vatican official would admit that the Pope was approaching the crisis of his long illness, but he was known to be suffering agonizing pain from varicose veins, which broke during the day. His ailment is complicated by neuritis and asthma.

Prof. Aminta Milani, the Pope's physician, remained almost constantly at the pontiff's bedside, watching his wavering heart action.

Sharp pains spread through his body like knife thrusts and he repeated the prayers of his Rosary beads to find relief.

The pains were so severe that his physician was forced to abandon his plan to apply an electric massage to improve circulation.

The Pope's circulation was one of the most alarming aspects of his illness, having been complicated by 25 days of virtual immobility.

His digestion also was reported seriously impaired and it is only at the pleadings of his doctors and intimates that he takes a few morsels of food.

Social Disease Unit Asks Fund Of $25,000,000

Federal Aid in Fight Is Sought in Resolution of Health Officer.

A $25,000,000 emergency Federal appropriation to combat the spread of syphilis and gonorrhea in the United States was called for yesterday at the second session of the National Conference on Venereal Disease Control Work.

The resolution calling for the appropriation was drafted at a meeting of Territorial and State health officers with Surgeon Gen. T. S. Parran of the United States Public Health Service.

Arthur T. McCormick, State health commissioner of Kentucky and president-elect of the Association of Territorial and State Health Officers, in introducing the resolution at a section conference meeting on public health control of syphilis said:

$25,000,000 Annually.

"If the Federal Government assumes as much responsibility for the control of syphilis as it has done for the care of the end results of this and other preventable diseases, it is apparent that the cost of an adequate disease control program will be $25,000,000 annually.

"It is earnestly recommended to the Administration, therefore, that authorization for this amount be given in appropriate amendments to the social security act.

"The surgeon general of the United States Public Health Service is urgently requested by this conference to present this program and the necessity for this authorization to the President and the Congress as an immediate emergency."

The social security act at present provides for Federal grants totaling $8,881,000 for all types of public health work.

Masked by "Prudery."

"When the question of syphilis," McCormick said, "was brought into the open from behind the prudery under which it has masqueraded as a killer throughout the centuries, it was found that more than a million new cases of this deadly infection developed each year.

"We learned further that less than half of those who were treated were being treated so as to make the end results of the disease no better than if they had had no treatment."

In a scathing attack on "moral prudery," Commander Charles S. Stephenson, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, United States Navy, arraigned the medical profession for retarding an effective program of venereal disease prophylaxis.

Scoffing at moral influences as a

Mattson Boy Ransom Due In 12 Hours

Negotiations Under Way With His Abductor, Friend Declares.

Parents Receive Letter; Ladder Abandoned by Prowler Clew.

By the Associated Press.

Tacoma, Wash., Dec. 29.—A friend of the Dr. W. W. Mattson family tonight disclosed negotiations for the return of kidnaped Charles Mattson, 10, were "definitely under way" and payment of the $28,000 ransom likely would be made within 12 hours.

Prior to this announcement, a special delivery letter and a prowler's ladder were the only outward signs of progress in solving the kidnaping of the boy, abducted Sunday night from his parents' pretentious home.

Federal and State manhunters stayed their activities as a safety precaution while the boy's family awaited an all-important contact signal.

The police disclosed they had seized the ladder nearly two months ago at the mansion of George Franklin, sr., after a bearded, pistol-flourishing invader had been frightened away from the place on two occasions.

Arrival of the special-delivery letter during the morning at the home of Dr. W. W. Mattson gave rise to reports the missive might have been from the squat, bewhiskered man who took Charles out of his home at pistol point and left a note reputedly demanding $28,000 ransom.

However, family spokesmen and Justice Department agents alike reported no progress toward return of the boy.

Hints "Public Enemy."

Existence of the crude ladder suggested the theory another "public enemy" was at work following a course strangely paralleling major kidnapings of the past. Police examined it eagerly for fingerprints.

The Franklins live two blocks from the Mattsons, in Haddaway Hall, built by the late J. P. Weyerhaeuser, lumber magnate, whose grandson, George Weyerhaeuser, was kidnaped in May, 1935, and ransomed for $200,000.

A man whose description coincided in many ways with that of the Mattson kidnaper entered Haddaway Hall twice in early November, police disclosed, terrorizing members of the Franklin family. During the second invasion, the intruder fired a pistol at the estate's night watchman. Franklin, a chain grocery operator, bought the mansion recently.

Although Police Chief Harold Bird characterized the Haddaway Hall incidents as "attempted burglaries" rather than attempted kidnaping, officials checked details of the ladder in the belief the intruder perhaps was the man who abducted young Mattson.

Kidnaper's Cry Recalled.

They pointed to the kidnaper's cry, "This place ought to be good for some money," as indicating he might have considered kidnaping or other crimes at several residences in the neighborhood.

The intruder made his first attempt to invade the residence in early November, when he placed the ladder against a wall under the window of a room where Mrs. Franklin and a small son were sleeping. Awakened by a flashlight beam, Mrs. Franklin screamed and frightened the man away.

Four nights later, a night watchman surprised a swarthy, black-bearded man carrying a flashlight and a pistol in a hallway leading to the Franklin sleeping apartments. The man fled when the guard ran for a rifle.

A few moments later, officers said, a maid saw the intruder on the lawn. The guard's cry for the man to halt was answered by a pistol shot from him. The man escaped through an open gate.

The Franklin family is now in California.

At Seattle The Times said an intimate friend of the Mattson family informed the newspaper he had studied the ransom note and is confident the apparently "crazed" kidnaper had a highly rational accomplice.

"I can't reconcile the very coherent note with the sort of crazed man who committed the kidnaping," the newspaper quoted the friend, who requested anonymity. "It leads me to think there were two of them."

Soviet Reported Behind Cuse Sales Of Airplanes to Spanish Government; President Asks Civil War Arms Ban

Proposed Shipment to Madrid Government Stirs Executive.

Capitol Hill Agog; Plans Tighter Law

90% of U. S. Business Held Co-operating, 10% Violating.

By Robert C. Albright.

Discretionary power to ban sales of munitions in civil as well as international warfare was sought yesterday by the President, as a wave of indignation against licensed plane shipments to Spain swept from White House to Capitol.

Appealing for executive authority to apply neutrality embargoes against nations wrung by internal strife, the President denounced proposed shipment by Robert Cuse of $2,777,000 in planes and motors to Spanish loyalists. He called it a perfectly legal but thoroughly unpatriotic act.

As the President spoke, a movement already was under way on Capitol Hill to amend the present neutrality act to block the Cuse shipment and others like it, but striking differences arose over the method of applying the ban.

Fear Influence on Germany.

Both at the Capitol and in cabled dispatches from London quoting informed British circles, fears were expressed that the licensed American plane shipment might influence Germany's decision on intervention in Spain and handicap Europe's nonintervention efforts.

As Senate peacemakers clashed over legislative remedies, Senator William E. Borah, always a potent voice in international affairs, unexpectedly lined up against a strictly "mandatory" course on neutrality policy, favored much discretion "to the judgment of those who must deal with the exigency of the hour," and lampooned "cash and carry" neutrality proposals as "a pretty sordid conception of national responsibility."

While the President was berating the proposed Spanish shipments and calling for broader neutrality powers, Chairman Key Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was drafting an amendment to show "the world that we don't believe in this sale, and that we intend to act as soon as possible to prevent such acts."

Nye Admits Indecision.

And Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, chairman of the old Senate Munitions Committee, was confessing his indecision over how to immediately block the Cuse shipments, and voicing fears that "any move in this case might constitute an unneutral act."

"I have a headache," said Nye.

President Roosevelt flatly told newspapermen that obviously further discretion should be vested in the President to act in cases of internal strife. He said no statute can possibly take into consideration every future contingency.

The President cited the proposed license sale by Cuse, president of the Vimalert Co., Ltd., of Jersey City, as a good example of the need of further discretionary powers by the President.

Had Opposed Shipments.

He said the State Department had received a number of applications for licensing of arms shipments. In each case, according to the President, the department had requested the exporters not to engage in such transactions, first, because they were contrary to Government policy, and second, because they would be endangering this Nation's desire to be neutral.

In all prior cases, the exporters went along, the President said, significantly observing that they represented the 90 per cent of business which is ethically honest, and of which he said he is proud.

Then, said the President, one man comes along and does a perfectly legal but a thoroughly unpatriotic act. He said this represented the other 10 per cent of business.

Championing the State Department's action in granting the license, the President said there was not a chance to do otherwise, as the law

Nazi Warcraft Rush to Bilbao To Uphold Ship Seizure Order

Reich Demands Release of Passenger, Cargo of Freighter Palos; Vessel Freed but Hitler Threatens Search of Boats Bound There.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Dec. 29.—Nazi warships pointed toward the northern Spanish coast tonight to force surrender of passenger and cargo of the German freighter Palos, released today by Socialist Bilbao.

The freighter, seized by Basque authorities at Bilbao last week, was released "upon demand of the cruiser Koenigsberg," a curt foreign announcement said.

But the cargo, which the Basques said was munitions despite Nazi denial, and one Spanish passenger, were held. They now must be surrendered or Nazi warships may retaliate by searching ships of any or all nations heading for Bilbao, Germany warned.

The cruiser Koeln and a torpedo boat were dispatched to the Bay of Biscay sector to force the Bilbao authorities to free the Palos' passenger and its sequestered cargo.

Torpedo boat convoys for German vessels were ordered earlier, and tonight this order still stood, a foreign office spokesman said.

Germany is fully aware of the dangerous implications of its threat to block shipments of war materials to Bilbao by searching ships, the spokesman said, but is confident it will not be forced to carry out the threat.

In other words, it was asserted, the Nazi government hopes Bilbao port authorities shortly will release the Spanish passenger taken off the Palos and the freighter's cargo.

Commanders of German war vessels in the Spanish zone were instructed to withhold aggressive action until it is made clear whether the latest demands to Bilbao will be granted.

Should the navy be compelled to force a showdown, an official said, there will be retaliatory action, but not of such a sweeping nature as to involve Germany in dispute with neutral nations.

Of the arrested Spaniard, who Bilbao charged had destroyed his identification papers when captured, a foreign office officials said:

"As the seizure of the Palos occurred outside Spanish waters and our Spanish guest was stopped clearly on German sail (the Palos' deck), we cannot permit his retention."

While the Palos incident and the apparent readiness of Berlin to invoke reprisals if necessary aroused the rest of Europe, Berlin newspapers devoted attention to the munitions sale by a United States firm to the Valencia-Madrid Spanish government.

This, with the charges 25 Russian

German, Rebel Allies Crushed, 5,000 Are Slain

Decisive Gains Are Claimed by Madrid in South; Zaragoza Menaced.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Dec. 29.—Socialist troops killed 5,000 Fascist troops and drove back enemy forces, aided by four battalions of German soldiers, in a southern offensive, the Madrid defense junta announced today.

Shifting of the current battlefront from fortified Madrid to the strong Fascist territory of Cordoba resulted in decisive gains for the Socialists, said dispatches from Andujar, in Jaen Province.

Fascists entrenched around Lopera and Villa Del Rio were bolstered by the German troops and several squadrons of cavalry, the dispatches said.

Capture of a cemetery at Teruel and Mount Mansueto, the war ministry asserted, gave Madrid forces complete domination of the Zaragoza Valley north of the capital and leading toward the City of Zaragoza—Fascist stronghold since the civil war broke out.

Within the capital, officials avowed their pleasure that the United States Department of State had ruled favorably to permit shipment of nearly $3,000,000 in airplanes and other armaments to Socialist defenders at Bilbao.

Artillery fire against the Madrid defenses was intermittent throughout the day.

Asturians Blast Rebels.

Madrid (Wednesday), Dec. 30 (U.P.). Asturian "dynamiteros" blew rebel machine gunners to bits early today when they led loyalist militiamen in a clean-up of Basuero, on the outskirts of Madrid.

Rebel "flying squadrons" made repeated attacks on the newly won loyalist position during the night and succeeded in placing machine gun nests in houses fringing the town.

The Marxist Asturians were summoned and hurled hundreds of sticks of dynamite into the nests, blowing the houses to splinters, after which loyalist infantry mass-attacked from two sides.

Madrid Motors Reported Sold By U. S. Army

Woodring, Aides Declare Engines Worthless If Discarded by Corps.

A report that 150 of the American airplane engines about to be exported to war-torn Spain were the property of the United States Army Air Corps up to a month ago, last night arose to complicate the strained situation which followed announcement of the export plans.

The Baltimore Sun published a report that the engines were sold by the Air Corps at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, on November 22, to Martin Liling, a New York broker, who later sold them to the Vimalert Co. The company is headed by Robert Cuse, of Jersey City, who on Monday was granted, reluctantly, a State Department license for their export, along with other engines and planes, to Spain.

Definite verification of the report the engines came from the Army was impossible last night.

Secretary of War Harry Woodring said he did not know whether the motors were formerly Army property but said it was possible they were. He said that engines are sold from time to time at Wright Field, but declared such sales occur only when the engines have been inspected and condemned as beyond the safety line. He emphasized that any engines so sold by the Air Corps would be unfit for military use.

Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Air Corps, likewise emphasized comparative worthlessness of any plane engines sold by the Army, while Brig. Gen. A. W. Robins, in command at Wright Field, told The Post over long-distance telephone the Air Corps had sold some engines last month, but said all the motors so disposed of at the field are so badly worn they could be repaired for use only at great expense and by purchasing a tremendous number of additional parts. The Army considers it cheaper to buy new engines, he said, than even to attempt to repair those sold.

The general made it clear that no

Workers in 10 Cities Plan Drive Sunday to Unionize G. M. Corp.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, Dec. 29.—Union representatives from ten cities will meet Sunday at Flint, Mich., to chart the campaign of the United Automobile Workers of America in collective bargaining negotiations with the General Motors Corporation.

Wyndham Mortimer, union vice president, issued the call to the conference "for the purpose of approving recommendations of the general officers concerning collective bargaining" with the big automobile concern.

William S. Knudsen, General Motors executive vice president, "acknowledged" today last week's request by Homer Martin, president of the U. A. W., for an "immediate general conference." Corporation officers said no arrangements for such a conference have been made.

An official statement by Mortimer noted "the growing seriousness of the situation caused by strikes now in progress in General Motors plants in Atlanta, Ga., and Kansas City, Mo., and the one precipitated in the Fisher Body plant, Cleveland, Monday."

Union representatives will be present Sunday from General Motors plants in Anderson, Ind.; Norwood, Toledo and Cleveland, Ohio; Janesville, Wis.; St. Louis, Mo., and Detroit, Pontiac, Lansing and Flint, Mich.

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Union drivers of the Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit bus lines, called out on strike early today, were ordered back to work about 17 hours later, but a union official termed the demonstration "a prelude to much more serious trouble."

About 400 of the company's 685 drivers involved in the walkout were ordered back to their jobs by Albert di Palma, president of Local 1099 of the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric and Motor Coach Employes, union officials said.

Di Palma, in a statement issued

Slash in Lump Sum Is Feared; Budget Unit Gets Fiscal Data

Carefully guarded from curious eyes, a voluminous report on fiscal responsibility of the Federal Government to the District of Columbia has been submitted to the Budget Bureau by the special committee of three named last summer by President Roosevelt, it was learned yesterday.

Although of vital interest to the commissioners of the District as well as all tax-paying residents of Washington, the committee's recommendations have not been disclosed to any District Officials and probably will not be until the report is made to Congress.

Consequently, speculation is rife in the District Building and among a few friends of the District on Capitol Hill as to whether the committee is urging an increase or a decrease in the $5,000,000 lump sum payment carried in the current appropriations act.

The consensus of predictions, founded upon contacts with committee members rather than knowledge of their findings, is that the recommendation will prove disappointing to the District and probably will advise lowering rather than raising the Federal share of payments of the District's growing expenditures.

Although District officials boldly suggested $12,000,000 as a fair Federal contribution when the committee began its conferences several months ago, they now are afraid part of the $5,000,000 may be taken away from them.

While the Budget Bureau now is engaged in studying the report while J. L. Jacobs, director of the survey, corrects proofs, the committee's recommendations will be submitted directly to the President before going to Congress.

Whether the report will be disclosed by the White House before reaching Congress is not known at this time, but the clause of the District appropriations act which authorized the inquiry places no restriction upon the Chief Executive.

Another angle of the study which has been kept secret from District officials is an account of the expenditure of the $50,000 provided from the $5,000,000 Federal contribution.

Recipient of License Called Mystery Man by Associate; Spends His Time Flying Over Country.

JERSEY CITY FACTORY OBSCURE; TELEPHONE AT HOME UNLISTED

U. S. Already Planning to Make Inquiry Into His Operations and Background; Aides at Plant Are Reticent.

By Sidney Olson.

Copyright, 1936, by The Washington Post.

Jersey City, Dec. 29.—Reports that the Russian government is the hidden backer in the application of Robert Cuse for a license to ship $2,777,000 in airplanes and accessories to loyalist Spanish connections, have led to intense governmental inquiry into the activities of this mystery man.

Cuse is a naturalized Russian.

He has, for several years, been a shoestring dealer in airplanes and aviation accessories.

Suddenly he is found applying for a license from the State Department to ship planes and engines to the government controlled port of Bilbao, Spain, for a total running into millions.

The airplanes specified in the application, which the State Department was forced to grant because of inadequacies in the law, have already been purchased by Cuse and the major part of the airplane engines to be shipped to Spain are also here in Jersey City. Some of the engines are said to be discarded U. S. Army equipment.

According to aviation authorities, who decline to be quoted, the only large deal that Cuse has ever been known to be affiliated with before was a purchase for Amtorg, the official Russian trading organization, with headquarters in New York.

Friendship of Soviet Backs Reports.

The friendship of the Soviet for the Socialist government in Spain has lent weight to the reports, from sources usually reliable, that Russia is backing Cuse and his Vimalert Company in purchasing airplanes and engines for Madrid.

There was every evidence here tonight that starting tomorrow several government agencies will be keenly interested in Mr. Cuse and his activities. President Roosevelt is interested. The State Department is interested. The Treasury, and particularly the income tax division, will be interested.

After issuing a statement late today, through intermediaries, that the planes he is sending to Spain are for commercial use only, Cuse disappeared. He is said to spend most of his time traveling around the country by air, purchasing used planes and engines. His name does not appear in any telephone book in Jersey City. The address in the application to the State Department was 807 Garfield avenue, Jersey City. This is his factory.

Assistant Declines to Give Name.

His assistant in the small, unimpressive two story brick building occupied by the Vimalert Company, tonight even refused to give this reporter his own name. He stated that he might be able to give his name tomorrow, after receiving instructions.

Cuse has requested the telephone company not to give out his unlisted private telephone number to his lavish apartment in the Gothic Towers here.

In the dingiest outskirts of Jersey City, cut off by almost impassable broken-cobblestone streets, is the Vimalert Company, of which Cuse is president and general manager.

The plant consists of two long buildings one of them two stories high, set in from the street, and encircled by reinforced wire fences topped with three rows of barbed wire.

Building Lighted, Machinery Running.

The main building was lighted and there were sounds of machinery running tonight. In the center of this building is a plain wooden door with the address, "807 Garfield Avenue," in metal letters nailed on the lintel.

There is a bell to push. After a while there are two clanging sounds and then quick steps. The door opens slowly—two inches.

The man who answered the door is young, about 35, with thin brown hair parted in the middle, big hands, and a broken nose. He was quiet, polite, hard-boiled.

In his hands, as the door swung in, was a short oak plank, two by six, cut to fit inside the door as a bar.

He was asked about Cuse. He said: "Whatever you ask, I'm going to say 'no' to it, see? So go ahead and ask questions."

"Justice Has Come at Last," Spain Says of Plane Shipment License

By the United Press.

Madrid (Wednesday), Dec. 30.—Madrid newspapers today gave bold headlines to a United Press dispatch from Washington telling of a plan to ship American airplanes to the Spanish loyalists at Bilbao.

"Justice comes at last," said the Republican Heraldo de Madrid.

"The United States has authorized the exportation of arms to the Spanish government as the legitimate government of Spain."

The leftist Socialist "Claridad" said the action of the Department of State in Washington was "toward a true form of international law."

The Communist newspaper, Mundo Obero, displayed the news prominently on its front page. Some portions of the dispatch appeared to have been censored.

Strange Light Brings Report Of New Helium

Astronomers Told of Red Spectrum Lines Never Before Seen.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, Dec. 29.—Some giant protein molecules, discovered at the Rockefeller Institute for medical research, today were identified as causes of disease.

All were plant diseases, "mosaic" or spotted leaf, in tobacco, tomatoes, spinach and phlox. But the proteins which caused them, small crystals hitherto believed inert and lifeless, were definitely found to be partly alive.

They pointed to a new source of disease, not only in plants but also possibly in humans, Dr. W. M. Stanley told the American Association for the advancement of science.

This world will indeed be a happy place to live in in the next 10 years if politicians and diplomats go half as far as aviation engineers will in the direction of solving their respective problems, Ivor Sikorsky, airplane designer, told the association today.

New Plane Outlined.

Designer of the first clipper to fly the Pacific, pioneer in the construction of big trans-oceanic flying machines, and a political refugee himself from Russia after the revolution uprooted the nobility, Sikorsky drew a clear, somewhat radical picture of the ship of the near future.

Within the next five years possibly, within ten certainly, we will see, he said:

Flying boats of 160 tons flying directly from Long Island Sound to Europe in 18 to 20 hours, carrying 40 to 50 passengers.

Swift round-the-world cruises that take only a week.

Leisurely world cruises of three weeks, two of these weeks devoted to sight seeing.

Flying levels for air traffic in the same direction, such as 10,000 feet of altitude for northbound ships, 12,000 for southbound airplanes.

Airplane travel safer than that of railroads or steamships.

A new treatment for trichinosis, a disease caused by small worms as a result of eating improperly cooked pork, was announced by Dr. P. D. Harwood, Dr. Jessie T. Cutler, Dr. Lloyd A. Spindler and Dr. S. X. Cross, of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The quartet of scientists in the Bureau of Animal Industry discovered increased quantities of guanidine, a toxic substance, in persons infected with the worms. The substance is also a serious factor in toxic burns, diarrhoea, and carbon tetrachloride poisoning.

Proof that one out of every eight persons in the United States is infected with the worms which cause trichinosis was offered by Dr. Maurice C. Hall of the National Institute of Health, Washington, D. C.

The "hoof curse" which Marco Polo reported in the Nan Shan Mountains of Eastern Turkestan in 1295, was identified today as the selenium soil poisoning recently discovered as prevalent in many parts of the United States.

The poisoning is fatal to animals and dangerous to humans. Because it causes the hair of animals to fall out, said Dr. Henry G. Knight, chief of the United States Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, this selenium poisoning has been held responsible for man's baldness, but this has not been proved.

Farmers and other plant growers may in the future electrify the soil or the crops themselves to direct their progress.

Texan Explains Theory.

This possibility was suggested by Dr. E. J. Lund, of the University of Texas, Austin, Tex., in a report on his experiments in measuring directly the tiny electric currents which flow back and forth on individual cells in plants and which appear to direct the life activities in growing things which have no central nervous system.

Dr. Pearl sketched biological principles to show that civilized man cannot confidently assert his independence from the laws which destroy the lemmings.

After 100,000 years during which the number of human beings in the world increased only slowly, Dr. Pearl said, in the last 300 years it jumped up fourfold. The increase was from eight persons per square mile in 1630 to 40 today. Most of this vast growth, he said, was in the progressive nations.

Indications are, he added, that the human population spurt is only three-quarters completed. Likening it to the lemmings, he said:

"Zoologists have long been familiar with the phenomenon of periodic rapid multiplication of populations of lower mammals—lemmings being the classic example—to such enormous absolute sizes as to entail high densities of population within quite large, but still limited habitat areas.

"These great spurts of lush reproductivity end, after the density has reached a limiting height, in self-engendered destruction of the major part of the population, usually through rapid and undirected mass migratory movements out of the overpopulated areas.

"These mass migrations blindly push on until some obstacle like the sea or a river is reached, in which vast hordes of the mass migrants perish."

Futility of Mandatory Neutrality Legislation Illustrated by Spanish Plane Episode.

By Franklyn Waltman.

WALTMAN.

WHATEVER the embarrassments abroad which may result from the State Department being forced by law to grant permits for the export of airplanes and airplane engines to Spain, this incident may serve the laudable purpose of bringing some persons on Capitol Hill to their senses in the matter of neutrality legislation.

This episode demonstrates better than volumes on the subject possibly could the futility of maintaining a non-intervention policy by Americans toward foreign conflicts if the President is placed in a rigid strait-jacket of mandatory legislation.

With his usual perspicacity when the obvious becomes apparent, Senator William E. Borah has seen the light and he has the courage to point out the mistakes Congress has made in undertaking to bind the President in the matter of arms embargoes. The Idahoan explains that "something must be left to the judgment and patriotism of the Congress and the President and the people who will come face to face with the exigencies" and again he asserts that "we will have to always take into consideration the sentiments and feelings and judgment of those who have to meet the exigency and not of those who undertook to deal with it 10 or 20 years before."

Such sentiments coming from Senator Borah are a little surprising but they afford evidence that Capitol Hill yet may be converted to a common sense attitude on this question of neutrality and will have sufficient faith in the President to let him have the authority to meet contingencies as they arise instead of imposing on him a course of action out of harmony with international realities.

It was with an almost clairvoyant eye that the Supreme Court in its decision upholding the validity of Presidential discretion in imposing arms embargoes ten days ago anticipated the type of situation which has now developed.

"It is quite apparent," asserted the court, "that if, in the maintenance of our international relations, embarrassment—perhaps serious embarrassment—is to be avoided and success for our aims achieved, Congressional legislation which is to be made effective through negotiation and inquiry within the international field must often accord to the President a degree of discretion and freedom from statutory restriction which would not be admissible were domestic affairs alone involved."

Thus the Supreme Court—so frequently made a scapegoat—cannot be blamed for the present situation. Rather the blame rests squarely on the majority of Congress which insists on binding the President in matters in which the Constitution and Supreme Court opinions invest him with particular authority.

It is one of the marvels of current political thought that a Congress which is so willing, nay, even anxious, to invest the President with discretionary authority over intimate details of the economic life of the Nation and the spending of huge sums, should be so adamant in refusing him sufficient discretion to conduct properly the foreign affairs of the Nation.

It is a strange attitude for Congress to take because it presupposes one of two frames of mind. Either Congress regards the President as less patriotic than it is, or it believes he is so naive or ignorant that crafty foreigners can pull wool over his eyes unless he is protected by statutory restrictions. This attitude on Capitol Hill toward the President has been a stumbling block in the conduct of American foreign relations for many years.

But whichever frame of mind actuates Congress, it is wrong. It goes without saying that the President of the United States has a patriotism as great, if not greater, than that of any man in the country. His sole function is to serve the whole Nation, while individual members of Congress think first of their own constituencies and of the entire Nation secondly, and not infrequently are ready to make political capital out of foreign policies.

The President, whoever he may be, is as sincere and anxious to keep this country out of war as any person on Capitol Hill. Equipped with the assistance of a State Department staff and diplomatic corps especially trained in the intricacies of international affairs, the President is far abler to handle such matters than are Senators and Representatives from the corn belt whose any claim to be heard, in most cases, is that they once read a book on international affairs.

Perhaps l'affaire Cuse will shake the gentlemen on Capitol Hill out of their prejudices. But that seems to be too much to hope for. If it does, then history may record that the munitions broker from Jersey City did a great service for his adopted land.

French Population Gains.

Paris, Dec. 29 (AP).—Official 1936 census figures today showed an increase of population for France. The total population was 41,905,968 according to the census taken August 3, but 2,453,507 were foreigners. The figures showed an increas of 71,045 over the last census which was taken in 1931. The number of native born increased by 508,461 to total 39,452,461.

H. E. Hitchcock Will Complete Norbeck Term

Appointment of Dakotan Brings Democratic Senate List to 76.

By the Associated Press.

Pierre, S. D., Dec. 29.—Appointment of State Democratic Chairman Herbert E. Hitchcock to the United States Senate today unsnarled the political situation which followed the death of Senator Peter Norbeck (Republican, South Dakota), ten days ago.

The appointment runs the Democratic membership in the Senate to 76, the highest party total in history.

Prior to Norbeck's death, the lineup was Democrats 75, Republicans 17, Farmer Labor 2, Progressive 1, and Independent 1. Hitchcock's appointment adds one to the Democratic total and cuts the Republican votes down to the record breaking low of 16.

Two years of Senator Norbeck's term remained, and it was generally believed Gov. Tom Berry would resign and be appointed by his successor to the Senate post.

Berry, a Democrat, will be succeeded January 5 by Leslie Jensen, a Republican. Lieut. Gov. Peterson had indicated the day before Norbeck's death he would resign in view of his indictment for embezzlement in connection with a bank failure.

Peterson announced a week ago he would not resign. However, several days later Berry, who had expected to appoint his successor for the remaining days in office, eliminated himself from consideration for the Senate post.

There were at least two factors to keep Berry from resigning and accepting the Senate appointment from the lieutenant governor. One was Peterson's indictment, and another was that Jensen and Donald McMurchie, the latter Republican lieutenant governor-elect, filed oaths of office immediately after Norbeck's death. A legal theory was advanced that they might be able to assume office at once if Berry or Peterson resigned.

Hitchcock, tall, genial lawyer who has been active in Democratic State politics for years and State chairman since 1932, will take office January 5 when Congress convenes.

Appointed Senator.

U. S. Job Still Open For 'Quake Forecaster

Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 29 (AP).—Dr. N. H. Heck, the Federal Government's No. 1 earthquake specialist, reported to the Geological Society of America today that the job in Washington of forecasting earthquakes was still open.

Science has made great progress, he said, in mapping definite routes which earthquakes follow over the world, but, he added, "we are still about as far away as ever from a system of predicting when they occur."

A. & P. Warned On Violations Of Packers' Act

Department of Agriculture Says Employe Pretends He Is Meat Broker.

By the Associated Press.

The Agriculture Department yesterday announced Secretary Wallace has ordered the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., New Jersey Corporation, "to cease and desist from various practices held to be in violation" of the packers and stockyards act.

The order, effective February 2, resulted from charges that the company engaged in "deceptive and unfair practices" by allowing "an employe to make representation to the effect that he is in the brokerage business when, in fact, he was purchasing meat supplies from meat packers for the company's account."

The department charged C. J. Noell, A. & P. employe, had collected "1, 2 and 3 per cent commissions" while acting as a meat broker and then turned these commissions over to the company, "deducting only enough to pay his salary and the expenses of his office."

President Favors Younger Jurists

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt believes that vacancies in the Federal judiciary should be filled by men under 60 years of age.

Reporters asked him yesterday about complaints of certain members of Congress that older candidates for judgeships stood no chance.

Experts Agree On Inheritance Of Cancer Germ

Drs. Slye, Little Hopeful Experiments on Mice Will Result in Cure.

By the Associated Press.

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 29.—Two of the Nation's leading scientific experts on cancer—who have opposed each other's theories for many years—came into partial agreement today for the first time on the inheritance of the disease.

Dr. Maud Slye, of the University of Chicago, presented a new theory of the inheritance of cancer in mice, and Dr. C. C. Little, of the Roscoe Jackson Memorial Laboratory at Bar Harbor, Me., declared recent experimental work indicated cancer of the breast in mice apparently was inherited through factors outside the chromosomes, formerly considered the only inheritance agents. They presented their views at a symposium on cancer sponsored by the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

For many years each scientist has criticized the other, often severely, but today they met and agreed on two points—that the inheritance of cancer in mice can be related closely to its inheritance in human beings and that "we are getting somewhere now toward the control of cancer."

Dr. Slye declared that "we do not need to be so hopeless about breeding out cancer in human beings except so far as romance is concerned," and admitted that science had not yet found a way of keeping two young persons from marrying even though each of their families showed a record of cancer.

In turn Dr. Little said he probably had been too severe in his criticism of Dr. Slye's work, that they should co-operate in the future and that Dr. Slye's new theory was a great contribution to a study of the disease.

Dr. Slye's new theory declares that one inheritance factor is responsible for each type of malignant growth, that another determines the place on the body where that growth will occur, and other causative factors in the environment or the organs of the body have some influence.

Dr. Little asserted his belief that tumors of the breast were the result of "some agent or agents" outside the chromosomes and transmitted through the female, with irritation of tissues and secretion of the female hormone known as theelin playing some part.

He added, however, that he was still not in complete agreement with Dr. Slye since he did not believe that the existence of factors on the chromosomes "having a slight effect on the formation of tumors" had yet been demonstrated.

Brokerage Firm Ordered in Court On SEC Complaint

In an order signed yesterday, Justice Jennings Bailey called upon Hertz & Co., brokers, and two of its officials to appear in court January 5 and show cause why they should not be enjoined for continued sale of stock in the Maryland Natural Gas Utilities Corporation.

The order followed allegations by the Securities Exchange Commission that the stock was being sold upon representations which were untrue. Some $2,500 of it already has been sold, the court was told.

Named in the order, besides the company itself, were its president, Gustave C. Hertz, and Ogden Hawks, a salesman.

In its complaint the Securities Commission asserted that the corporation gave out "misleading information" in connection with a gas well near Romney, W. Va., where drilling operations were begun in 1932, and work ended in 1934, when the well casing collapsed.

Wife of Major Brown Injured Trying to Stop Runaway Auto

Friend Also Hurt When Knocked Down by Driverless Car.

Hurled from the runningboard of a runaway automobile which she was attempting to stop, Mrs. Olga Brown, wife of Maj. Ernest W. Brown, suffered severe bruises yesterday and the friend whom she attempted to save, Mrs. Bessie Hinman, 50, of 619 G street southwest, was in a serious condition at Emergency Hospital.

Mrs. Brown, with a group of friends, was visiting at 2200 Cathedral avenue northwest when the accident occurred. The car, parked in a driveway, slipped its emergency brake and started rolling toward Mrs. Hinman, who was directly in its path.

The wife of the Superintendent of Police leaped to the runningboard of the machine and made a futile attempt to seize the emergency brake before she was thrown off. The car, driverless, knocked Mrs. Hinman to the ground, its wheels passing over her.

Both Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Hinman were rushed to Emergency Hospital. Mrs. Brown, after treatment, was released and sent to her home at 2911 O street northwest.

MRS. OLGA BROWN.

Mrs. Hinman was treated for a fractured leg, fractured ribs and a possible fracture of the collar bone. The car is owned by Laura V. Taylor, also of 619 G street southwest.

U. S. Asked to Curb All Public Works

Chicago, Dec. 29 (AP).—The public works committee of the American Association for Labor Legislation today said there was no further occasion for expanding public works in the United States or for Federal construction subsidies to States and cities.

"Private construction, especially of residences, requires the skilled labor which should now be released by the curtailment of all but the most urgent public works," said the report, presented at the association's business meeting today.

The report added there was a shortage of skilled construction labor already noted in many parts of the country, a fact which it said might limit the speed of recovery in private building.

Delegates re-elected Joseph P. Chamberlain, of New York, president. Other officers chosen included: Vice presidents, Ernest G. Draper and John A. Ryan, of Washington.

Wisconsin Alumni Enter Ouster Row

Madison, Wis., Dec. 29 (AP).—University of Wisconsin Alumni Association directors unanimously adopted a resolution today asking for a "full and fair statement of the charges" against Glenn Frank, president, in the move to dismiss him, with "ample opportunity" for Frank to defend himself.

The resolution, adopted at a closed session attended by 14 of the 20 board members, was the first official action taken by the alumni in the controversy.

Harry A. Bullis, of Minneapolis, president of the alumni group, was authorized to appoint a committee of five to represent the board at a public regents hearing January 6 on the question of re-engaging Dr. Frank.

Harold Wilkie, chairman of the regents and leaders of those opposing Frank, has asked that the president's tenure be ended in June on the ground his administration has been inefficient.

Relief Scheduled In Budget Address

President Roosevelt yesterday said he would include in his budget message to Congress estimates for all proposed deficiency appropriations, including that for relief. He added that he had discussed the relief deficiency with Cabinet members and other officials, but that a figure had not been decided upon. It has been indicated that he will ask for about $500,000,000.

The budget message, the President said, will go to Congress January 8. He will deliver his report on the state of the Union personally next Wednesday.

Estimates for next year, the President said, will be complete, except for a regular relief appropriation, the size of which will be determined later in the session. The President added that his estimates will show either a deficit or a surplus next year but smilingly declined to say which it would be.

Foreign Trade Up In First 9 Months

By the Associated Press.

Reporting aggregate foreign trade for the first nine months of this year at the highest level since 1930, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States yesterday said higher prices were an important factor in the gain.

Total exports and imports for the period was set at $3,499,000,000, compared with $3,074,000,000 in the similar period last year and $5,353,000,000 for the similar months of 1930.

Export prices during 1936, it reported, have been 12 per cent above the 1931-35 average.

The chamber said the most widespread geographical distributions in more than a decade also was a factor in the trade this year, and is was "an indication of better economic conditions throughout the world."

U. S. Aides Plan Safe Highways For Automobile

Envision Network for High Speed, Belt and Radial Roads for City.

By the Associated Press.

A national network of multiple land highways for cross-country travel, and a system of belt and radial roads for city traffic, were visualized by Government experts yesterday as the way to make automobiling safe and speedy.

While the Bureau of Public Roads was announcing apportionment of $200,000,000 among the States, the bureau's engineers were ready with proposals for spending this and later appropriations on the roads of the future.

Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau, envisioned the motorist of a few years hence riding on roads designed especially for high-speed automobiles.

He predicted:

Traffic lanes wide enough for ample clearance—22 feet for two-lane traffic.

Four-lane roads where traffic warrants, with a parkway in the center to separate traffic going in different directions.

No deep ditches on the sides, but shoulders wide enough for stopping.

Surfaces consistently smooth and nonskid.

Walks for pedestrians at safe distances from the roads.

Surfaced areas where buses may pull out of traffic and discharge passengers.

Turnouts for rural mail carriers.

MacDonald, who recently returned from studies in Europe, said local and through traffic must be separated by parallel service roads.

He said he was convinced of the "underlying soundness" of belt line highways, plus radial roads on new right-of-way, to serve metropolitan areas.

The belt roads would circle a community, the radial ones spread spoke-like through it.

Boy, Garfield Kin, Taken Ill on Eve of White House Visit

By the Associated Press.

Just when he was all set for a special trip to the White House, where his great grandfather once lived, Jackie Comer was put to bed with a cold.

The brown-eyed, 10-year-old boy from Williamstown, Mass., took his troubles cheerfully yesterday. One reason was a promise that he would be up again today and to the White House the day after that. Another was that turkey stayed on his sickbed diet.

Jackie's great grandfather was James A. Garfield. His grandfather, Dr. Harry A. Garfield, whom he is visiting, has arranged with White House authorities for the youngster to see parts of the Executive Mansion not ordinarily open to the public.

Father of Dead Child Arrested for Neglect

Poteau, Okla., Dec. 29 (AP).—Bill McCray, a coal miner who, police said, declined to call a doctor and prayed over his pneumonia-stricken son while the child lay dying, was charged today with "wilfully neglecting to furnish medical aid."

Police Chief J. B. Russell said he found McCray and his wife praying over their 18-month-old son and two other children. He declared they declined medical aid with, "The Lord will heal them."

Parley to Chart G. M. C. Union Campaign Is Set

Workers From 10 Cities Called to Conference Sunday in Flint.

late today, described the walkout as a "24-hour strike and a protest against the contemptible labor baiting tactics of the B. M. T. during the last few weeks."

Marine Strike Unbroken.

San Francisco, Dec. 29 (AP).—Spokesmen on all sides conceded privately today they held virtually no hope of settling the maritime strike in the near future, but negotiators plodded on with their peacemaking.

Some observers expressed belief the disputants were waiting for Congressional action to break the deadlock in the costly 61-day-old walkout.

Parley Offer Studied.

Cleveland, Dec. 29 (AP).—The United Automobile Workers of America considered tonight a proposal from Mayor Harold H. Burton that union representatives and Fisher Body Co. executives meet to settle a "sit-down" strike that closed the concern's plant yesterday.

The mayor suggested also that operations be resumed pending final settlement of the labor controversy, in which nearly 7,000 persons were thrown out of work.

Lincoln B. Scafe, general manager of the plant, approved the proposals, but President Louis F. Spisak, of the union local, said they must be submitted to the organization's executive committee.

Road Contract Awarded For District Sanatoria

A contract for construction and grading of roads at the District Tuberculosis Sanatoria, Glenn Dale, Md., was awarded by the Commissioners yesterday to E. R. P. Smith, Hyattsville, Md.

Smith was low bidder with an estimate of $19,892.50. Award of the contract was approved December 12 by the Federal Emergency Administration, Public Works, and was accepted by the Commisioners yesterday. Several months will be required to complete the project, which calls for constructing stabilized and concrete roads.

Gift to Standley Honors Leader At Retirement

Chief of Naval Operations Is Presented Plaque by Officers.

Admiral William H. Standley, U. S. N., Chief of Naval Operations, who will retire from active duty tomorrow, was guest or honor at a dinner last night at the Army and Navy Club, given him by more than 200 officers of the Navy and Marine Corps on duty at the Navy Department here.

Tribute to the career of Admiral Standley, both as an officer and as a diplomat, when he attended the London Naval Conference, was paid by Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews, U. S. N., Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, toastmaster.

"I have been directed by the President of the United States to express his felicitations and best wishes to our guest of honor, and to compliment him upon his years of splendid service and to say he joins with us in best wishes for Admiral Standley," said Admiral Andrews.

Swanson Pays Tribute.

Then he read a message of praise from Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson, who was unable to attend the affair.

When he referred to Admiral Standley's work on two conferences for the limitations of armaments, Admiral Andrews said:

'Here he proved himself a diplomat as well as a naval officer in winning the respect and admiration of all his associates, and in bringing home a treaty in which he lost no ships, but one under which we can build our Navy to meet the needs of this Nation."

Admiral Standley was a dynamic, responsible force in building up the Navy of the present day, the toastmaster pointed out.

"Prior to his taking office as chief of naval operations, the Navy had been in the doldrums as far as naval construction was concerned," declared Admiral Andrews.

Speaks of "Standley Era."

"His inspiring leadership, his knowledge of his profession and the results he has accomplished have been such that in future years we may well refer to the 'Standley era' as we do to that periof of the early '80s as the beginning of a new Navy."

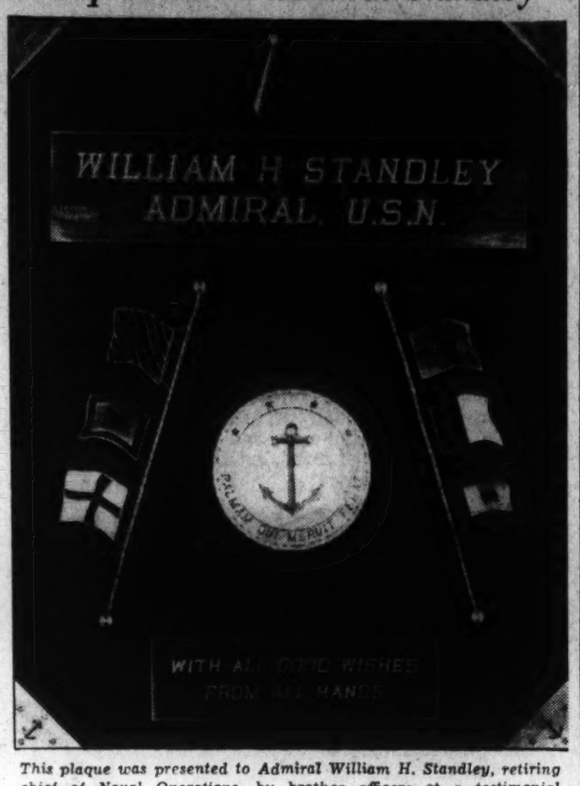
Following a brief addres by Admiral Standley, he was presented with the bakelite plaque.

At the top of this gift is the four-starred flag of the full admiral. In the center is the four-starred shield, carrying the inscription, "Who is worthy carries the palm."

On either side of the shield is a signal hoit drawn in appropriate colors for the signal flags employed.

One flag hoist is a signal to "Cease present exercise," and the other says "Well done!" At the bottom is the inscription, "With all good wishes from all hands."

Plaque Honors Admiral Standley



This plaque was presented to Admiral William H. Standley, retiring chief of Naval Operations, by brother officers at a testimonial dinner at the Army and Navy Club last night.

Secrecy Shrouds Murder Inquiry; Wife Gives Clew

Movements of police investigating the murder of Eugene Hancock, 66-year-old steamfitter, of 506 Third street northeast, last night were shrouded in secrecy as they worked on what was believed to be secret clews furnished by members of the family.

Officer Elon Turner, of Prince Georges County police, and Detective Sergt. Aubrey Tolson, of the Washintgon homicide squad, questioned Mrs. Cora Hancock, wife of the murdered man, for more than an hour yesterday in an effort to check on her husband's whereabouts since he disappeared from his home December 13.

It was reported later that Turner had journeyed to Baltimore, presumably on a lead furnished by Mrs. Hancock. Sergt. Arthur Hepburn, in charge of the Upper Marlboro police sub-station, said he had received no word from Turner since he left early in the day to go to Washington.

Lieut. George Darnall, head of the Washington police homicide squad, said Mrs. Hancock was on the verge of hysteria and no further efforts would be made to question her until after the funeral today.

Parents Warned 'Alice' Is Menace

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—A question as to whether Lewis Carroll's "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass" might not have a destructive effect on children was raised today by Dr. Paul Schilder, of Bellevue Hospital's psychiatric division.

Dr. Schilder, in a paper read before the American Psychoanalytic Association, described the author of the classic children's stories as "a particularly destructive writer," whose characters are given to cruelties.

Affluent Russians Buy All Hotel Reservations

Moscow, Dec. 29 (AP).—Affluent Muscovites today had bought out New Year's reservation at prices which made some skeptical the profit system was gone.

Four principal hotels charged 115 ruble ($23 at official rates)—about two weeks' wages for the average worker—for a light supper, a half-bottle of Soviet champaign and the privilege of dancing until dawn.

Driver Cleared In Boyle Death; Another Held

Coroner's Jury Exonerates LaFetra; Rhine Is Arrested.

The traffic death of John Boyle, 81-year-old newspaper correspondent, was ruled accidental yesterday by a coroner's jury.

The verdict exonerated Edwin S. LaFetra, 63, of 3612 Macomb street northwest, driver of the car that struck Boyle at Eighteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, September 30.

Boyle died Christmas Day, the ninety-eighth District auto death this year.

Meanwhile, police arrested Joseph F. Rhine, 18, of Hyattsville, Md., in connection with the death Monday night of Motorcylce Policeman Ernest Grissett, 29, who succumbed in Walter Reed Hospital of injuries suffered last Wednesday.

Rhine was held at the Sixth Precinct station for several hours before he was released in custody of his attorney to appear at a coroner's inquest.

Grissett's motorcycle overturned at Fifth street and Concord avenue northwest. Pclice said, Rhine's automobile apparently did not strike the policeman.

Rivera Fears Trotzky's Assassination in Mexico

Villa Obregon, Mexico, Dec. 29 (U.P.).—Fear Leon Trotzky would be assassinated in Mexico was expressed tonight by Diego Rivera, well-known mural painter, and Max Schachtman, editor of the literary works of the exiled Russian leader.

Trotzky, accompanied by his wife, left Norway for Mexico December 19 aboard a Norwegian steamer. The Mexican government had offered him a haven after Oslo authorities refused to renew his residence permit, which expired December 20.

Driver Faces Charge In Highway Fatality

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Leonardtown, Md., Dec. 29.—John Davis, of Trent Hall, was held under bond on a technical manslaughter charge following a hearing here before Magistrate Harry Davis, of Charlotte Hall, into the fatal injury of Della Briscoe, colored. Briscoe was struck by a car, allegedly driven by Davis, while crossing the State highway at Charlotte Hall.

At an inquest immediately following the accident the jury disagreed. Davis will await action of the St. Marys County grand jury.

SEAGRAM SUGGESTS
4 NEW WAYS TO HAVE FUN ON NEW YEAR'S EVE

EVERYONE loves a New Year's Eve party. Make yours one to be long remembered. Here are four tested, festive party-suggestions guaranteed to help you give all your guests the time of their lives. Keep this advertisement as your guide.

1—BARNYARD MATING DANCE. One white card per guest. Make simple drawing of animal: horse, cow, chicken, duck, etc. Distribute half of animals to men, other half to ladies. Men go into one room. Ladies await "mating call" in adjoining room. Close door between. Call group of, say, "ducks" into center of floor, instruct them to give "mating call" ("Quack, quack") as door opens. Each lady holding duck card rushes out and claims her "mate". These "mates" stand aside, and process is repeated for next animal, until all are "mated". Orchestra strikes up, dance begins.

2—SNIFTER. Play at table, or with two teams standing. Use cigarette papers, strip from cigarette. Give one to head of each team. At signal, place finger against one nostril, one end of paper under other nostril, and inhale, thus holding paper to nostril by suction only. Without touching paper with fingers, pass on to "team-mate's" nostril. Repeat until one paper reaches last member of team. If any player touches paper with finger, or if paper drops, return to head of team and re-start on "snifter" career.

3—CARD TOSSING. Place hat in middle of floor. Place chair six feet away. Give player deck of cards. From chair, attempt to toss as many cards as possible into hat. Give each card a point value. Player receiving most points wins a predetermined prize.

4—WATER POLO. Use a long, oblong roasting pan (the longer, the better); ping pong ball, and enough water to cover bottom of pan. Put pan in middle of floor. Appoint referee. Choose two opponents (man and girl, preferably). Referee drops ball into center of pan, and players try, by blowing, to make ball touch farther end of pan. Ball may not be touched. Players may neither lift hands from floor nor shift position of knees. One goal counts as game.

Senate Inquiry Is Set in Fatal Plane Crashes

Copeland Committee Will Seek Cause of Mishaps Which Killed 21.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Prompt Congressional investigation of recent crashes that have shot the 1936 airplane accident death toll to formidable heights was promised last night by Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York. At the same time the Commerce Department announced plans for a conference of airline operators and Federal experts to work out measures to prevent future accidents.

Three fatal crashes on United States airlines during the last two weeks have killed 21 persons, bringing the toll for this year to 67, far above any year since the Commerce Department started recording air accidents in 1928. Only 23 fatalities were recorded last year. The highest previous toll was 40 in 1932.

Plans Public Hearings.

Senator Copeland, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, told the United Press from his home in New York that he planned to investigate the recent disasters in public hearings to be called early in the new year.

"We want to know whether bad flying orders, defective plans or inadequate safety facilities on the ground are responsible," he said. "Accident after accident may be mere coincidence, but it excites my curiosity."

Plans for the safety conference were announced by Col. J. Monroe Johnston, Assistant Secretary of Commerce. He said it would be called at an early date.

Coroner Plans Inquiry.

Burbank, Calif., Dec. 29 (AP).—An inquiry to determine whether negligence was involved in Sunday night's transport plane crash was announced today by Coroner Frank Nance, while pack and draft horses carried the bodies of twelve victims out of secluded Rice Canyon.

In calling an inquest for next week, Coroner Nance said:

"I believe it is the usual procedure to land passengers at Bakersfield in case of storms over the Tehachapi ridge."

The southbound United Airlines plane crashed into the canyon-side 20 miles north, soon after Pilot Edwin E. Blom had asked for a radio beam to guide him through storm clouds into Union Air terminal here.

$14,835,000 Gold Withdrawn by U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Carrying out its new "sterilization" program to guard domestic credit against gold movements, the Treasury reported yesterday a consignment of $14,835,000 in gold to an "inactive" account.

The gold was acquired last Thursday. Under the "sterilization" program all acquisitions of imported or newly mined domestic gold will be so handled that it cannot affect excess bank reserves.

Reserves in excess of amounts required behind deposits provide the basis for credit expansion and have been hovering around the $2,000,000,000 level.

The Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board drafted the new control program, which provides for the sale of Treasury bills when gold is acquired. In that way, funds equal to the gold acquisitions will be removed from the money markets and the incoming gold will be kept from swelling excess reserves.

400 Miners Continue Strike at Hanger, Va.

Hanger, Va., Dec. 29 (AP).—Approximately 400 coal miners continued on strike here today after a conference between officials of the Oakwood and Page coal companies and United Mine Workers failed to bring a settlement of their differences.

Sheriff Fulton Ratliff and several deputies stood by pending further negotiations in the strike that began Friday night, reputedly because of a reduction of wages of machine men from the district 28 to the district 17 daily rate.

2-Pound Infant Gains 3 Ounces in 10 Days

Superior, Wis., Dec. 29 (AP).—A baby girl so small her mother's wedding ring was too large to serve as a bracelet and who choked on food from a medicine dropper spent her tenth day of life in a hospital incubator today.

The child, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Johnson, of Port Wing, Wis., weighed 2 pounds at birth. Today she weighed 2 pounds and 3 ounces. Hospital attendants believed she had a good chance to survive.

Miller Heads I. C. C.

Carroll Miller was elected Interstate Commerce Commission chairman, yesterday for the calendar year 1937. The chairmanship is rotated annually among the commissioners. Born in Richmond, Va., Miller was appointed to the commission, from Pennsylvania in 1933.

Social Disease Unit Asks Fund Of $25,000,000

Federal Aid in Fight Is Sought in Resolution of Health Officer.

venereal disease preventative, Commander Stephenson said:

"Moral prophylaxis belongs to the church and the medical profession should leave it there. In my medical experience, and I've talked with thousands of patients, I have yet to find a single case of venereal disease that has been prevented by moral prophylaxis."

Treatment Cuts Figure.

Studies in the Navy, Commander Stevenson said, revealed that out of a group of 5,119 men, 346 would contract a venereal disease if the group did not receive prophylactic treatment. When such treatment was given 9 would contract syphilis, 81 gonorrhea and 29 chancroid.

Those who did contract the disease failed to receive treatment within two hours after they had been exposed.

"I have never known of an infection to develop when an effective prophylactic was used within an hour after exposure," Commander Stevenson said.

Commander Stevenson said 20,000,000 tubes of chemical prophylaxis and 1,250,000,000 shields against venereal infection were sold in the United States last year.

Education Neglected.

"We in the medical profession have underestimated the reasoning power of those in civil life," Commander Stevenson said in deploring the failure of doctors to educate the public more completely in the effective use of prophylaxis.

Commander Stevenson emphasized that the prophylactic value of soap and water should never be overlooked.

The section adopted a resolution urging that the distribution of prophylaxis and knowledge of their use be encouraged as part of the program to control the spread of venereal disease.

Newspapers Praised.

Dr. McCormick praised American newspapers for co-operating in the program to wipe out syphilis and gonorrhea, and Commander Stevenson urged physicians to make data reduced to simple language more readily accessible to newspapermen.

"The press is making a greater contribution toward the control of syphilis than any other group in the country today," Dr. McCormick said.

Dr. W. W. Bauer, director, Bureau of Health and Public Instruction, American Medical Association, was enthusiastic over the co-operation of newspapers and magazines in an educational program, but lamented:

"We have not been able to crack the radio yet."

It was recalled that Surgeon General Parran about two years ago was not permitted to broadcast in New York because he refused to substitute "social disease" for "syphilis" in his prepared address.

Unique "Bribery" Plan.

Dr. Joseph Rovy, of the health bureau, Rochester, N. Y., told of a new method of "bribing" Rochester physicians to co-operate in a venereal disease control program.

Rovy said he offered to pay private physicians $1 for every venereal disease case they discovered, $1 for discovering the source of the infection, $1 for each "contact" case discovered and $2 for each patient who was persuaded to undergo a three-year period of unbroken treatment.

"We started the program in August and up to September 1 it had cost us $1," Dr. Rovy said sorrowfully. "If it isn't any more successful than that we will have to increase the amount of the fee."

Dr. Rovy added that he had contributed the fund from which the fees are derived.

"If we expect the private doctor to participate in public health work we must expect to reward him," Dr. Rovy said.

Nearly One in Six Suffer.

Dr. Charles V. Craster, health officer of Newark, N. J., stressed the importance of examining domestic employes for venereal diseases. Between June 1, 1934, and November 30, 1936, 19,381 domestics were given blood tests in Newark, and 3,329 were found to be suffering from syphilis. Those free from disease were given work cards to show their employers.

At the section meeting devoted to methods of securing closer co-operation among private physicians in controlling the spread of veneral disease, speakers complained against the inadequacy of medical schools.

Dr. Udo J. Wile, professor of dermatology and syphilology, University of Michigan, said a survey of 83 large medical schools revealed that 28 had facilities considered "moderately adequate" to teach syphilology.

A Safeguard to Unborn.

Dr. Wile said that through co-operation of parent-teacher and medical groups it would be possible to wipe out congenital syphilis in one generation. He said it would be almost impossible for an infected mother to transmit the disease to her child if she submitted to treatment in the first five months of pregnancy.

More than 200 women—nurses, social workers and public health experts—attended a section meeting to discuss the medical follow-up of the veneral disease patient. Miss Lena R. Waters, director, department of social service, University of Pennsylvania Hospital, presided.

The 714 delegates to the conference from 40 States and the District of Columbia will meet again today in the Department of Commerce auditorium to formulate a comprehensive program for control of veneral disease.

William Fitzgerald Is Dead in Montana

William F. Fitzgerald, retired Butte (Mont.) copper miner and uncle of Mrs. Edwin F. Hege, 3822 Livingston street, Chevy Chase, died yesterday in St. Mary's Hospital, Rochester, Minn., where he had been a patient for several months.

For a number of years Fitzgerald, who was 78, was a visitor during the winter months at the Hege home. He was a pioneer settler in Butte, and widely known in mine circles there.

Funeral services will be held here probably Saturday. Burial will be in Rock Creek Cemetery. Besides his niece, Fitzgerald is survived by a nephew in the West. He was unmarried.

Statuette of Apollo Prize Find at Athens

Chicago, Dec. 29 (AP).—An ivory statuette of Apollo, pieces of which still are being sought, was reported today to the Archaeological Institute of America as Prof. T. Leslie Shear's prize discovery in excavations at the market place of Athens, Greece.

Prof. Shear, head of the American School of Classical Studies in Athens, described the sixth year of excavating, financed by John D. Rockefeller, jr. He said the statuette, 12 inches tall, had been reconstructed from 250 pieces recovered, with the missing fragments replaced by beeswax. A workman still is sifting the dirt at the site searching for bits of ivory, Shear said.

Movie Couple in Court.

Los Angeles, Dec. 29 (AP).—Dave Gould, film dance director, filed suit today for annulment of his marriage to the former Frances Paxton, dancer and singer, with whom he eloped by airplane, December 5, to Yuma, Ariz.

W. M. Stockbridge, Attorney, Is Dead

William M. Stockbridge, 69, retired patent attorney who formerly practiced here and in New York, died yesterday at his home in Sarasota, Fla., after a long illness.

A native of Washington, the son of the late Virgil D. and Martha A. Stockbridge, he was graduated from the old Central High School. Thereafter he attended Cornell University and Columbia Law School.

He practiced patent law here until he moved to New York in 1902. He maintained his New York office until nine years ago, when ill health forced his retirement. Since then he, his wife, Mrs. Louise White Stockbridge, and a son, William White Stockbridge, lived in Sarasota.

Other survivors are two daughters, Mrs. R. T. Friebus and Mrs. John Ludlow, of Montclair, N. J., and three sisters, Mrs. W. H. Griffin, Mrs. George R. Anderson and Miss Lucetta W. Stockbridge, of this city. Burial will be in Sarasota.

Mgr. William J. Flynn, Mission Leader, Dies

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Right Rev. William J. Flynn, 48, national director of the Marquette League for Catholic Indian Missions, died today. Mgs. Flynn's work in the Indian mission field was recognized in 1932 by Pope Pius XI when he was made a domestic prelate and in 1935 when he attained the rank of prothonotary apostolic.

Coroner Clears Bridges.

Long Beach, Calif., Dec. 29 (AP).—A coroner's jury decided today the death of Joseph Miranda, 8-year-old bicyclist, in a collision with an automobile driven by Harry Bridges, West Coast maritime labor leader, was "accidental and unavoidable."

Dr. Broadus Dies in Canada; Noted Educator

Former D. C. Professor for 28 Years Had Taught in Alberta University.

Word was received here yesterday of the death in Alberta University Hospital, Edmonton, Canada, of Edmund Kemper Broadus, formerly of Washington and Alexandria.

Dr. Broadus, who died December 17, had been professor of English at the University of Alberta for 28 years, and was widely known as an educator, scholar and author in America and England.

A member of an old Virginia family, he was born in 1876 in Alexandria, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Broadus. His father was in the Federal service.

Educated at George Washington University, where he was graduated in 1897, Dr. Broadus had lectured at Oxford and been on the faculties of the University of California, Stetson University, the University of South Dakota and Harvard.

He is survived by his wife; a son, Kemper H. Broadus, and his mother, Mrs. Thomas A. Broadus, who lives at Paeonian Springs, near Leesburg, Va.

Heinz Lists Gift of $18,500 to G. O. P.

By the Associated Press.

Howard Heinz, of Pittsburgh, reported yesterday to a Senate committee that he gave $18,500 to the Republican campaign.

A Mrs. Heinz, of Pittsburgh, reported a contribution of $5,000.

Among Democratic contributors reporting to the campaign funds investigating committee were E. A. Cudahy and E. A. Cudahy, jr., of Chicago, each reporting gifts of $5,000.

Other Republican contributors included Dr. Victor C. Thorne, Greenwich, Conn., $13,550; D. Milbank, New York, $13,000; Charles S. Dewey, Chicago, $9,000, and Mrs. Dewey, $3,200; Mrs. C. W. Henry, Philadelphia, $5,050; William Ewing, New York, $5,737, and J. W. Kleckhefer, Chicago, $6,000.

Chain Store Employes To Get Another Bonus

Employes of the G. C. Murphy Five and Ten Cent store chain were notified yesterday that they would be paid a second Christmas bonus, the amount to vary according to length of service with the company. Some 327 employes of the two local stores will be affected.

Approximately 3,500 employes in the 196 stores will receive a total of $150,000 from the additional Christmas award. The amount of the bonus ranges, according to the length of the employe's service, from a week's salary to four and one-third week's salary.

Wallace Gives a Hint On 'What is Chop Suey'

By the Associated Press.

Part of the mystery of what goes into chop suey was cleared up yesterday by Secretary Wallace.

One of the reasons he gave for deciding that a large retail store organization was a "meat packer" subject to a Federal law was that it made 400 to 500 pounds of chop suey daily.

Wallace said "20 per cent of such chop suey" was composed of "fresh hog meat."

Harvard Lauds Peabody At Funeral Rites Today

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 29 (AP).—Harvard will accord final honor to Dr. Francis Greenwood Peabody, former dean of the university's divinity school, tomorrow when funeral services are held in Appleton Chapel.

Dr. Peabody, who died late yesterday at 89, was founder of the department of ethics at Harvard and served for 30 years in the divinity school.

Archduchess Maria Dies.

Innsbruck, Austria, Dec. 29 (AP).—Archduchess Maria, 35, daughter of Archduke Francis Salvator, died here tonight in a sanatorium. She was a grandniece of Francis Joseph I, Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary, who died in 1916.

Mrs. Bessie Wild, Composer, Is Dead

Mrs. Bessie Noble Wild, 61, well-known musician and composer, died yesterday at her home, 6824 Fifth street northwest. She was the wife of Edward S. Wild, retired Government employe.

For 25 years Mrs. Wild, a native of Sharpsburg, Md., was assistant to Dr. J. W. Bishoff, noted blind professor. She was directly descended from early Maryland settlers and fighters in the Revolutionary War.

Mrs. Wild was active in the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Order of the Eastern Star and the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church. She is survived only by her husband.

Funeral services will be held from the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, with burial in Washington Memorial Park.

Library Trustees To Change Budgets

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Three recommendations were approved unanimously here today by the trustees section of the American Library Association in session at the Drake Hotel. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, of Washington, chairman of the section.

A policy which would include in the budgets of municipal libraries funds to carry on reasonable activities in connection with community relations was indorsed.

A second recommendation was that local library boards take out memberships in the American Library Association for each member, and a third, that library trustees work for State-aid libraries and for certification of librarians.

Hitler Demands Release of Passenger and Cargo Taken From Palos.

submarines and a large contingent of British volunteers had gone to the aid of the Spanish Socialists, provided the headlines for most newspapers.

Release of the Palos received only scant space.

Meanwhile, it was learned in official quarters that Chancellor Hitler was planning "several important conferences" with his highest advisers tomorrow.

Some diplomatic quarters saw in this an indication that the Fuehrer was much more seriously concerned with the Franco-British demarche, seeking an end to enlistment of foreign volunteers to Spain, than appeared on the surface.

The chancellor had not yet replied to the Franco-British note asking Germany to enforce a ban against the volunteer enlistments, and some observers believed he was deliberately playing for time in which to consult Premier Mussolini of Italy on a common policy.

Behind the curtain of the Spanish crisis Germany's colonial aspirations continued to play a prominent role in diplomatic discussions.

Much interest was aroused by the Christmas visit to Berlin of Marcel Knecht, Paris publisher, who was reported reliably to have put out unofficial hints in conversations with Hitler and his lieutenants on the possibility of France returning war-lost African possessions to Germany —in a trade for pledges of peace.

The chances of Germany, nonmember of the League of Nations, obtaining an African mandate from the League was believed a point of the conversations.

France, Britain to Act.

Paris, Dec. 29 (AP).—France and Britain will make a second representation to Berlin if Chancellor Hitler evades answer to the pending request to ban "volunteer enlistments" to Fascist Spain, French foreign office circles said tonight.

Asked what France would do if such representation proved barren, one official said:

"First of all we expect Germany to accept.

"But in case Hitler should refuse, there is nothing we could do but see that all volunteers necessary were sent to aid the Madrid government to balance the German aid.

"We cannot watch the constitution of a veritable German army on the other side of our Pyrenees frontier without meeting the threat."

Circles close to the foreign office expressed fear Hitler's delay in answering the note, delivered Sunday but made known last week, may be because of an effort to make a separate "deal" with Britain—thus isolating France.

Hitler Reported Negotiating.

These circles said there were "mysterious rumors" that Hitler had approached Britain in an attempt to come to terms regarding their mutual interests in Spain—such as mines—with the promise that British rights would be respected.

Meanwhile, Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos disclosed to the Chamber of Deputies that Poland has given France a guarantee to aid Czechoslovakia if the latter country is attacked by Germany.

The guarantee to support one of France's allies was a condition to a French loan to the Warsaw government, Delbos said.

The deputies gave unanimous approval for a loan to Poland of 1,350,000,000 francs ($63,045,000) the majority of which is to be used for strengthening Polish defenses.

Airplanes Once Were U. S. Army's

first class power would attempt to use the engines in a fighting machine, even if they were repaired.

When the report was called to the attention of the State Department, officials there expressed astonishment at the possibility that former Army motors could have found their way into the consignment that has created such a furore.

Observers here, meanwhile, were speculating on the reaction in Europe that might follow receipt of word that even a portion of the shipment contemplated by Cuse possibly had come from the United States Army. They feared an entirely wrong interpretation might be placed on that fact.

Came at Critical Time.

Officials of this Government have felt licensing of the exports, mandatory under the present neutrality act, came at a critical time in the efforts of most European powers to maintain universal neutrality in the grim struggle within Spain. Efforts of some of the powers to prevent shipment of munitions or men to the warring factions there, might, it was felt, be seriously affected by word that this Government, though contrary to its own wishes, had licensed export of American planes, engines and parts to a Loyalist-controlled port. Word, in Europe, that some of the engines to be exported recently had been in use in this country's Army might prove an additional blow to peace efforts, it was feared.

The Baltimore Sun article said:

"The engines are of a type designed especially for military purposes, and had been used in air corps fighting planes. They were manufactured for the Government by the Curtiss Airplane & Motor Co., of Buffalo, N. Y.

"According to a Baltimorean who bid on the motors, planning to use them in speed boats, Liling obtained the entire stock when his bid was revealed to be the highest of six or seven opened by Col. Frank D. Lackland, Wright Field officer in charge of the sale.

"They are of the 12-cylinder, liquid-cooled type, and are rated at 500 and 600 horsepower each. They are not considered suitable for commercial purposes, and had been used by the Air Corps in pursuit planes and bombers, among other types.

"Among the other supplies which Mr. Liling bought at the sale were complete hangars, valves and other equipment used by the Army, the Baltimorean said. The stock was scattered about the country, at Air Corps supply depots, and was sold 'as is.'"

Soviet Reported Behind Cuse In Airplane Sales to Loyalists

Recipient of State Department License to Ship to War-Torn Spain Called Mystery Man; Plant in Jersey City Obscure.

He was asked where Cuse lived; where he was now; if he would see reporters; if he would grant merely an interview.

The man said: "Look, buddy. Now listen. I ain't telling you my name, I got reasons. I ain't telling you anything, not even Cuse's middle name. Cuse got out a statement today. That's all there is."

Behind the man, standing holding the oak plank is a great steel door leading to the business office, with a lever inside it by which it can be thrown. The door, painted battleship grey, was the clanging noise heard outside.

He was told that a story could be written from Cuse's point of view; a story to deal with Cuse's home life, his hobbies, his family, his friends, his business "successes." He shook his head, set down the plank, took out a cigarette and sucked on it.

"Cuse is out of town. He's always flying around. If you took a plane to Pittsburgh right now, he'd probably be in a plane just leaving for Chicago.

Always Flying Around.

"He's always flying around, Texas, New Orleans, New York, everywhere.

"This is nothing new. We've been selling planes and motors and parts for more than 12 years. We've sold them before to lots of other countries. Nobody ever raised a fuss before."

"Are you his manager, or assistant?" he was asked.

"Never mind who I am. Because of something that happened today, I ain't giving my name out. Maybe I will tomorrow. There was 25 reporters here from New York this morning and they all was nosing around about my name. They ain't none of 'em got it, either."

Through the opened steel door comes the clack of typewriters. Several girl stenographers are laughing inside, although it is late in the evening, far past the usual working hours. Several engines are humming quietly on the plant side, but everything seems sound-proofed.

"So Cuse is a mystery man?"

Kind of Mystery Man.

"That's it. Kind of a mystery man."

"Is onyone else authorized to speak for him, a member of his family, or some one else in the firm?

"I ain't said he has a family, have I?" He sucked triumphantly the unlit cigarette. "You guys seem to have the idea this is just a little business we have here. It isn't, it is big. We've been in it 12 years, and not for our health either. I don't see why they kick around about this shipment. There's no law against it, is there?"

"Not right now, but there may be a law passed in time to stop this shipment, if it's true you won't start shipping before two months of repair work."

"Izzat so?" the man looked gloomy. "How can them Congressmen be that way?" he shook his head.

He went on, more friendly in tone. "Look, buddy, I still ain't telling nothing. Get it? I couldn't be in politics with strings on me. I want to be in a job where I can tell anybody to go to hell. That's me, now."

"That's the Vimalert Company, too, isn't it?"

In Tough Spot Before.

He laughed. "Look, bud, I've been in tough spots. I was in a spot once on the edge of a dock where it was either jump off and drown or jump into something I didn't want to jump into."

"I could take it then and I can now. So I just won't talk, and that's all."

He was asked all kinds of questions—what Cuse looked like, his age, whether he is a good man to work for, what he does for fun, anything that could be told without breaking a confidence.

He said: "Cuse (he never said Mr. Cuse) doesn't do anything but work. Day and night, always work. No relaxation at all. He flies all over, and works everywhere he goes. I ain't saying whether he is a naturalized Spaniard or Turk or Chinaman. All I say is that he's an American citizen.

Put Through Big Deals.

"You say the only big deal he ever put through was through Amtorg, the Russian company? That's sheer baloney, mister. Straight, clear baloney. He's put through plenty of deals; big ones, too. I ain't saying whether they were through Amtorg or not.

"Look at this factory."

"I'd love to."

"No; I mean, what you can see of it. Strictly modern, that's what. Does that look small time to you? No.

"Come back tomorrow. Maybe I can tell you my name then. I don't think I'll be in touch with Mr. Cuse any more tonight, though.

"Sorry I can't tell you anything, but you know how it is. Good night."

He led the way to the outer door and picked up the oak plank.

Outside the small floodlights shone on the long stretch of bull fence, casting the pattern's shadow on the broken bricks and crater-like holes of the streets that surround the plant.

Earlier today Cuse issued a statement saying the airplanes "are commercial planes that are neither designed, built nor equipped for conversion into fighting planes.

"The planes have been used by private owners throughout the country for a considerable length of time. The replacement of these planes and engines, the overhauling of engines and the manufacturing of engine spare parts will provide employment for approximately 1,500 men for a period of one year.

"My company is engaged in the manufacturing of engines and parts and had dealings with foreign countries in its usual course of trade for 12 years. In my opinion, during the present lack of employment and vast expenditure of public money for relief, an opportunity of securing work through trade with countries that are not at war should not be passed over.

"Besides, there is another angle to the situation. The airplane-manufacturing industry is greatly in need of skilled metal workers, and manufacturers of engines and parts are in need of skilled mechanics and machinists and unless employment is provided for them, in case of need, our country will be in the same situation as the European countries are at present as far as a shortage of skilled workmen is concerned.

"Whatever new laws may be passed in the future, the fact remains that my company has purchased commercial airplanes for shipment to a country with which we are not at war on the strength of and in compliance with the existing laws of our country and the license for their export was granted accordingly."

U. S. Plane Sale Causes Anxiety On Hitler's Role

London Fears His Decision on Spain Intervention May Be Affected.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 29.—Fears the American Government's action in licensing export of airplanes intended for the Spanish Socialist government may influence Reichsfuehrer Hitler's decision on intervention in Spain were expressed in informed circles here tonight.

The British government eagerly studied all information bearing on the possibility President Roosevelt will act to tighten the neutrality law and align the United States with efforts of European powers to keep arms out of Spain.

Foreign office officials awaited a report from Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador at Washington, on the sale of American airplanes to the Valencia government.

Informed sources said Britain and other European powers may urge the United States to place a ban on export of war supplies to Spain.

It was pointed out President Roosevelt could make American neutrality effective regarding Spain by recognizing the Valencia Socialist regime and the Burgos Fascist Junta as belligerents or by asking Congress to amend the law to include civil war.

Such executive or legislative action at Washington would be welcomed in London, it was stated.

Officials said it would be "useless" for the nonintervention committee here to ban arms shipments by its 28 member nations if munitions could flow freely from countries outside the agreement.

The foreign office continued work on details of a tentative plan for a "mild" six-power naval blockade in Spainish waters to prevent spread of the conflict to the rest of Europe. It has been suggested that Britain, France, Italy, Germany, Portugal and Russia unite in establishing a sanitary cordon around the Iberian Peninsula.

Sister of Emperor Wed To Manchukuo Officer

Hsinking, Manchukuo, Dec. 29 (AP). With a high Japanese army officer acting as matchmaker, Princess Wu Ko, sister of the Emperor Kang Teh of Manchukuo, was married here today to Lieut. Chia Hsi, a staff officer in the army of Manchukuo. The Japanese army, which dominates Manchukuo, has had a hand in arranging the education and marriages of several of the Manchukuo Emperor's brothers and sisters. Kang Teh, one-time "boy emperor" Hsuan Tung of China, later known as Pu Yi, was made sovereign of Manchukuo in 1934 by Japanese military power.

Winebrenner Is Elected By Sigma Tau Gammas

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 29 (AP).—Sigma Tau Gamma, national teachers college fraternity, today elected D. K. Winebrenner, of Reading, Pa., grand president. Cleveland, Ohio, was recommended for the next biennial convention in 1938.

Other officers named included H. L. Minton, Conway, Ark., first vice president; Glen Pennington, Emporia, Kans., second vice president; Floyd Pierce, Kansas City, Mo., grand auditor; Haddon Rhoads, Fairmont, W. Va., grand historian.

President Asks Arms Sale Ban In Civil Strife

Indignation Mounts Over Cuse Plane Shipment to Loyalist Port.

requires the Government, when asked, to license such shipments.

Raising the question of whether Cuse could seek damages in the Court of Claims for profits denied him if new legislation is passed extending the neutrality embargoes to civil wars, the President expressed doubt that such claims would be valid.

Mr. Roosevelt took the view that the Supreme Court's recent decision upholding the arms embargo act of 1934 intimated that under such circumstances reimbursement would not be sustained, on the ground that the proposed sale was contrary to public policy.

In strengthening the neutrality law, the President said he would prefer that the term "civil war" not be used, because of varying interpretations possible. The term in itself might mean anything or nothing, pointing out that our own civil war was not designated as such when it started, and that the Indian wars and the Whisky Rebellion might or might not have been considered civil wars. But he observed that two organized armies are fighting in Spain, and that this normally should be regarded as civil war.

In any case, he said in conclusion, the circumstances should be decided by somebody who is in authority 365 days a year, meaning the President, as chief executive.

Cuse Defends Act.

Meantime, in Jersey City, Cuse was defending his plans, denying the proposed plane shipments were intended for war use, and asserting that "whatsoever new laws may be passed in the future, the fact remains that my company has purchased commercial airplanes for shipment to a country with which we are not at war on the strength of and in compliance with the existing laws of our country and the license for their export was granted accordingly."

In answer to the argument that the airplane sale would give work to Americans, President Roosevelt told reporters that the same argument was used in connection with sales of machine guns in 1914, 1915 and 1916.

At the Capitol, Nye said he intended to call on the State Department for the names of all parties involved in the sale of equipment to Cuse, "to ascertain whether any persons involved in creating the present embarrassing situation are the same parties previously active in other cases which came to the attention of the Senate Munitions Committee."

Calls Spain Powder Keg.

The President's denunciation of the shipment was echoed by Senator Pittman, who said "there is no manufacturer of munitions who does not know that Spain is a powder keg, with the fire getting closer every minute.

"There is no question that this movement from the United States would embarrass other nations who are sincere in their efforts to prevent an expansion of this Spanish civil war," said Pittman. "I believe that 90 per cent of our people are ready to make almost any sacrifice to keep out of war, and I would go the limit to see that the remaining 10 per cent do not endanger the peace of the United States."

Pittman said he would call a meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee next week to consider the neutrality act amendment he already is drafting, and he anticipates speedy passage, without opposition. Chairman Sam D. McReynolds, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he would offer a similar amendment.

Pittman said his proposed amendment simply would extend the temporary neutrality act to cover civil wars, providing that the embargoes now in the act would apply whenever the President finds a state of civil war exists. He said the term "civil war" would need to be defined, and he would not have it apply to "every little minor trouble."

Pittman Gives Views.

The Senate Foreign Relations chairman said the ban should apply in every case where provisional governments or juntas have been set up, or where both sides were willing to be aided by a foreign state, or where one of the factions controls a large portion of the country.

Such a stand by this Government in the Spanish situation, he said, would demonstrate to the world that the United States is anxious to cooperate in neutrality efforts.

On the other hand, Senator Borah, like Nye, took the view that the situation in Europe is such that this Government ought to be on its guard against any act indicating it was taking sides in the struggle.

"It is impossible," Borah said, "to have anything to do with the Spanish situation directly or indirectly, without taking sides in one of the most serious contentions that has existed upon that continent for many a day."

Repeating his usual warning against foreign entanglements, Borah said the Spanish strife is not a conflict between groups of the Spanish people, but a fight "between groups of nations which are fighting out their battle on Spanish soil."

As opposed to the group of former munitions committee Senators seeking "mandatory" neutrality legislation, and "cash and carry" provisions that foreign belligerents furnish cash and their own ships for materials they buy in this country, Borah broke away from drastic "mandatory" proposals.

He said that "we cannot in advance of a great emergency of war foresee and foretell by rigid legislation every situation which may arise."

"Something must be left to the judgment and patriotism of the Congress and the President and the people who will come face to face with the exigencies," Borah said. "I am in favor of 'mandatory' legislation so far as it is at all practicable, but we cannot cover the whole subject in that way."

Nor did he think that "cash and carry" legislation would "in any sense measure the conceptions of the American people as to what they should do in time of war."

Echo's Borah's Views.

Nye largely echoed Borah's views that any action to stop the Cuse shipment "might be construed as taking sides," but declared the American people ought not to "compromise" on a strong neutrality course in the future.

"We have to have it quickly, and abandon commercial considerations to get it," said the North Dakotan. "All of the trade in Kingdom Come isn't worth our experience of 20 years ago, for which we are still paying. I favor embargoing every conceivable commodity which a nation at war might want. I would virtually close the door, drop the gates down, and say absolutely nothing will we sell you."

Nye is drafting two proposed constitutional amendments, one to require a national referendum on going to war and another providing for requisitioning of private property by Congress, with or without compensation, in time of war.

In the House, Representative John Rankin (Democrat), Mississippi, asked rescinding or repeal of the Cuse license by the State Department. If it cannot be rescinded, Rankin said it should at least be held up two or three weeks, until Congress can act.

At the State Department, Acting Secretary of State R. Walton Moore deplored the lack of a statute which would have prevented the licensing of plane shipments to Spain, and said he regretted that "the money-making instinct continues to assert itself in time of war."

Senator Borah's Statement

Senator Borah's statement on the neutrality act, issued last night, follows:

The State Department did the right thing. It obeyed the law. It is unfortunate that any citizen should wish to take advantage of the situation. Nevertheless, I do not see how the State Department could have done other than it did.

We lawmakers placed the "Mandatory" in the wrong place in the law. This is one instance where the mandatory principle worked the wrong way.

It illustrates something that we ought to keep in mind while legislating on this subject of neutrality, and that is, we can not in advance of a great emergency of war foresee and forestall by rigid legislation every situation which may arise. Something must be left to the judgment and patriotism of the Congress and the President and the people who will come face to face with the exigencies.

Can't Cover Whole Subject.

Neutrality legislation can never cover some matters "mandatorily" successfully and efficiently perhaps. But many things must be left to the judgment of those who must deal with the exigency of the hour. I am in favor of "mandatory" legislation so far as it is at all practicable, but we can not cover the whole subject in that way.

No one knows where the next war will start, what nations will be engaged in it, or what the issue will be, or upon what part of the earth the conflict will be carried on, or what it will be best for us to do in every exigency which may arise. We will have to always take into consideration the sentiments and feelings and judgment of those who have to meet the exigency and not of those who undertook to deal with it ten or twenty years before. So I repeat, there is a limit to "mandatory" legislation.

The main thing for us, as a nation, is to keep free of all political commitments or entanglements so that we may be entirely free, as a government, to deal with the exigency when it arises.

"I think this incident throws some light on the "cash and carry" proposition, which seems now to represent the most advanced thought on the subject of neutrality legislation.

Pretty Sordid Conception.

As I understand this proposition, the immorality of selling to belligerents consists not in the selling or making money or profits out of the war, but in the fact of carrying it to the belligerents. Well, that is a pretty sordid conception of national responsibility. And I do not think if it were put upon the statute books, it would in any sense measure the conceptions of the American people as to what they should do in case of a war.

The situation in Europe is such that we ought to be on our guard against doing anything which would indicate that we are taking sides. It is impossible to have anything to do with the Spanish situation, directly or indirectly, without taking sides in one of the most serious contentions that has existed upon that continent for many a day. The conflict in Spain is a conflict between two philosophies of life, between two systems of government. It is not a conflict between groups of the Spanish people. It is a fight between groups of nations which are fighting out their battle on Spanish soil. And it is certainly to be regretted that any American citizen would want to do anything to indicate the attitude of the American people.

REA Soon to Advance Funds to Co-operative

By the Associated Press.

Arrangements for the first cash advance to the Shenandoah Valley Electric Co-operative, of Harrisonburg, W. Va., were made yesterday at a conference here of officials of the Co-operative and the Rural Electrification Administration.

Necessary papers were signed and REA officials said an installment of $3,000 from the $125,000 loan previously authorized would be forwarded within a few days.

Women's Shop to Pay Bonuses to Workers

Substantial bonuses are being presented 22 employes of Whelan's, the women's specialty shop, it was announced yesterday.

"We are not making a 'fine' gesture," commented Miss Sarah Carrick, head of the store. "We are simply showing our appreciation of the good business we have enjoyed this past year. We want to share our touch of prosperity with those who have worked so hard to make it possible."

Dr. G. F. Dudley Leaves Parish After 43 Years

Bishop Freeman and 500 Friends Honor Pastor at Luncheon.

The Rev. George Fiske Dudley, who for 43 years of Episcopal ministry has served a single parish, St. Stephen's, received the good wishes of his fellow churchmen yesterday as he retired from his rectorship and left for a vacation to Florida.

Nearly 500 parishioners and friends paid their respects to the venerable leader and his wife at a luncheon in the Willard Hotel.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, bishop of the Washington diocese and Dr. Dudley's superior, led in extending felicitations by citing the St. Stephen rector's long career as a model of clerical devotion, loyalty, helpfulness and leadership.

In another tribute, Dr. Z. B. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, where the retiring rector has always been a communicant, said "everyone is delighted that Dr. and Mrs. Dudley are going to have a vacation, provided they come back to give more of their talents to the work of our diocese."

Fund Campaign Launched.

With the testimonial luncheon the congregation launched an emergency fund campaign to raise money to meet financial requirements of the parish. Lynch Luquer, parish leader and general chairman of the fund committee, recalled Dr. Dudley's untiring efforts to develop the parish, and expressed the hope that his work would not be lost for lack of funds.

The emergency situation, it was explained, grew out of the erection of a new church building on Newton and Centre streets northwest, and the consequent obligations which had to be met in the face of a nation-wide depression. The campaign goal is $45,000 to apply on indebtedness.

Unable to meet the obligations itself, the parish, now known as St. Stephen and the Incarnation, has appealed to the entire diocese for aid, and Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, D. D., of Washington Cathedral, has been named chairman of an advisory committee.

Dr. Stokes to Attend.

Dr. Stokes, prevented by illness from attending the luncheon, sent his felicitations to Dr. Dudley and his appeal for contributions from all Episcopalians through a letter read at the luncheon by Bishop Freeman.

Dr. W. Sinclair Bowen, a co-chairman of the Diocesan committee pointed to assist in the campaign, addressed the group yesterday also. When Dr. Dudley was named rector of the newly formed St. Stephen's parish in 1893 it had less than 50 families, the rector recalled in a response to the testimonials yesterday. Now it consists of more than 500.

"The devotion of the church members made the parish grow," said the rector. "I know that the work will go on."

He said one of the happiest moments of his life came the morning he first stepped to the pulpit of the only church he was ever to serve as rector.

"I had just returned from Oxford, and was just ordained," he told his friends yesterday. "All that I had been looking forward to had materialized. I had my own church."

Cromelin Elected D. C. Masons' Head

Paul E. Cromelin, attorney, has been elected grand master of Masons in the District, following the annual elections of the fraternity at Masonic Temple.

Another lawyer, Aubrey R. Marrs, was named junior grand steward, the lowest ranking elective office in line of succession to the chair of grand master.

Cromelin, prominent at the bar, was assistant United States attorney from 1919 to 1921. He was educated in the schools here, and received his law degree from Georgetown University. He was a captain in the Air Service during the World War.

In addition to his Masonic duties, he is a director of the Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., a member of the Washington Board of Trade, the National Press Club, the Sigma Nu fraternity and the American Legion, and is a trustee of Trinity M. E. Church and Sibley Hospital.

Security Grants Allowed for D. C.

The Social Security Board yesterday announced grants totaling $210,216.46 for public assistance in the District and in Mississippi.

The District received $84,386.72—$31,889.81 for aid to the needy aged, $1,334.55 for aid to the needy blind and $51,162.36 for aid to dependent children.

Washington is one of the 24 jurisdictions co-operating in all three of these provisions of the social security act. According to December estimates, it is aiding about 5,490 persons—1,600 old people, 90 blind and 3,800 dependent children.

D. C. Robbery Suspect Is Seized in San Diego

A warrant charging grand larceny was sent to San Diego, Calif., last night to extradite William Harvey, 24, accused of taking $500 from Child's Restaurant, 1340 New York avenue northwest, last May.

Harvey, according to a wire received here, has confessed the theft of the money and agrees to return here for trial. Police said the money was taken while Harvey was employed as cashier at the restaurant.

2 Americans Risk Lives Today to Fly 5 Miles Over Andes

New York, Dec. 29 (AP). — Two American explorers will gamble their lives tomorrow on their belief that an airplane can lift them 5 miles into subzero air from the equator.

James H. Gray, instructor of the Ecuadorean air corps, and Andre Roosevelt, photographer, announced through the Heye Foundation here they would attempt to fly over Ecuador's "grandfather volcano," Mount Chimborazo.

The crater of the great cone has been estimated at 21,000 feet above sea level. It is located only 150 miles south of the equator.

While Gray handles the ship's controls and oxygen equipment, Roosevelt will attempt to make a photographic topographical map of the portion of the Andes over which they are flying.

The feat will be a stringent test of both flying and photographic equipment for the Andes includes every kind of weather in the world.

Two Men Injured As Ditch Crumbles

Two colored men, were injured, possibly seriously, yesterday when the walls of an excavation caved in on them at 400 Seventh street southwest. The men were taken to Casualty Hospital.

According to police, the men, Charles Walker and Jesse Copland, of K street southwest, were working at the bottom of the ditch when one of the sides gave way. They were removed by fellow workmen. Both were treated for internal injuries.

Average Man Doped Election Good as Farley

Research Head Says Voters Predicted Actual Result in Poll Experiment.

New York, Dec. 28.—Jim Farley, who guessed correctly that Landon would carry only two States, will have to look to his laurels as a political forecaster.

Average American citizens were, collectively, just about as good at doping the election as Farley was, says Dr. George Gallup in a paper prepared for the American Statistical Association convention in Chicago this week.

Dr. Gallup, whose American Institute of Public Opinion forecast the Roosevelt landslide, declared that the most accurate poll of 1936 was an experimental poll conducted by the Institute last October in which the voters themselves were asked to make their own predictions. They scored a ten-strike.

The voters indicated a clear and unmistakable landslide for Roosevelt, and when the ballots were tabulated by States the results tallied to an amazing degree with the actual State by State election returns. The average deviation in the 48 States was only 4.87 percentage points.

Ballots were distributed by mail and by personal interviewers to a total of 111,852 voters located in the 48 States. They were asked the question: "Regardless of how you yourself plan to vote, which presidential candidate do you think will win?"

Following are the State by State figures, compared with actual percentages in the election. Note that the poll results correctly separate the two States which voted for Landon—Maine and Vermont.

Regardless of how you yourself plan to vote, which presidential candidate do you think will win?

Average error per State...4.87

"The average error," said Dr. Gallup, "is less than 5 percentage points. In 30 States the error is less than 3 percentage points. The electoral vote prediction, of course, is perfect.

"Talleyrand once said that the only person smarter than anybody is everybody. It appears that the only person as smart as Jim Farley is everybody.

"There is much food for thought in this poll. Just why the people in Maine and Vermont should have thought that Landon would win while the voters in the other States should have thought that Roosevelt would win, and why their votes should split almost exactly as the votes in these States actually did split, I cannot explain. Certainly, here is an interesting problem for the social psychologist."

SEC Questions Stock Trading On Bank Funds

Counsel Traces Loans to Investment Company in Market Deals.

By the Associated Press.

Questioning legality of such transactions, counsel for the Securities Commission yesterday said loans for stock market trading had been traced from the Liberty Bank, of Buffalo, through an investment affiliate to officers and directors of the bank.

This development occurred toward the end of another day's inquiry by the SEC into investment trusts and their activities.

With George D. Kleindinst, now president of the bank and once president also of the affiliate, Liberty Shares Corporation, on the witness stand, Commission Counsel L. M. C. Smith read from New York State statutes, and asked whether they were not violated.

"I can see that you would reason the thing out the way you did," Kliendinst, bulky and low-voiced, replied, "we did not construe it that way."

The statute cited forbids loans direct or indirect by a bank of the board of directors. Kleindinst conceded no such approval was given.

The talk of law violation climaxed a day of testimony on the formation of Liberty Shares, and its transactions with the bank, with which there was an interlockng directorate prior to 1932, the testimony also touched upon the formation of a liquidating company, Castorlan Corporation.

Took Over Company.

Highspots of the testimony were these:

That from a total investment of $10,400,000 when Liberty Shares was organized in April, 1929, the values of its assets shrank to $710,000, as of September 30, 1936.

That in a merger, Liberty Shares took over one company which had substantial loans to officers and directors of the bank outstandng and made additional loans to these officers and directors as margin accounts for stock trading.

Loans by Liberty Shares to what Smith referred to as "insiders" (officers, directors and employes of both bank and affiliate), totaled $2,306,000 at the end of 1929; $4,191,000 at the close of 1930, $2,792,000 at the end of 1931, $2,575,000 at the close of 1932, and $2,996,000 at the end of 1933.

That as additional loans were made, Liberty Shares borrowed additional amounts from Liberty Bank, and also borrowed $1,300,000 from Chase National Bank of New York. For the latter loan Chase National settled for $200,000 in 1934, taking a loss of $1,100,000.

U.S. Asked for Ships To Carry Cotton

New Orleans, Dec. 29 (U.P.).—The American Cotton Co-operative Association today requested "immediate release" of ships tied up in the Government "graveyard" here for use as carriers of cotton to Japan and other Oriental nations.

The association sent telegrams to officials of the United States Maritime Commission and to Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. They said the association was suffering for lack of cargo space for important shipments of cotton to the Orient.

Officials of the cotton association said the increasingly difficult task of finding bottoms for cotton movement was caused by demands from grain and other exporters for every available ship.

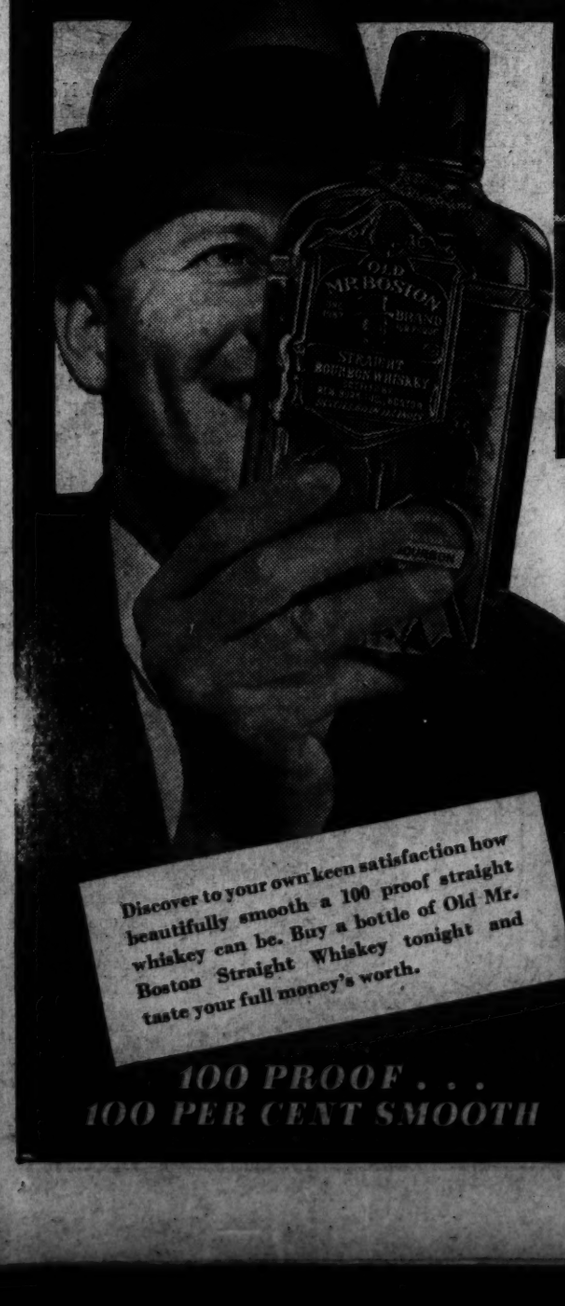
THINGS TO LOOK FOR WHEN YOU'RE BUYING . . .



LUGGAGE
To tell what kind of foundation a rigid-type suitcase has, rap it sharply with the knuckles. A clear sound shows its foundation is wood or fiber. A dull sound means it is cardboard.

SILVERPLATE
To tell whether the base is nickel silver (the best) or white metal (cheapest) strike the piece sharply with a pencil. If it rings, the base is nickel silver.

MATTRESS
A good mattress should have deeply indented tufts. If the tufts are shallow and pull out easily, the mattress is not the best quality.

. . . And when buying WHISKEY look for two things on the label

1. THE TYPE OF WHISKEY . . . BLEND OR STRAIGHT
2. THE "PROOF" . . .

These statements on the label are dependable guides to the kind of whiskey you want.

It's easy to get what you want in a straight whiskey. Look on the label for the words, "straight whiskey." That tells you it's all whiskey and all one whiskey. Then look for the "proof." That's a measure of strength and, therefore, a measure of value. If you want all the value you can get for your money, be sure to get a 100 proof straight whiskey.

More and more people who want full value are buying Old Mr. Boston Straight Whiskey not only because it's 100 proof, but because this extra strength carries with it an extra load of round smoothness and extra flavor richness. Put it up to your taste . . . not just the first taste but the lingering sensation on your palate of mellow smoothness and deep, full-bodied flavor.

Discover to your own keen satisfaction how beautifully smooth a 100 proof straight whiskey can be. Buy a bottle of Old Mr. Boston Straight Whiskey tonight and taste your full money's worth.

Lady Houston, Richest Widow In Britain, Dies

Her Magazine Constantly Berated Baldwin and MacDonald.

By the United Press.

London (Wednesday), Dec. 30.—Lady Fanny Lucy Houston, eccentric widow of a British shipping magnate who spent her millions on strange whims, died early today. She was editor of the London Saturday Review, which was rarely without a bitter attack on Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin.

Lady Houston inherited $35,000,000 from her third husband, Sir Robert Paterson Houston, who died in 1926. She was known as the richest widow in Britain.

She had suffered from vertigo and heart trouble for several years.

She had many nicknames, including "Britain's Fairy Godmother" and the "Empire Queen."

Aviation Enthusiast.

Lady Houston—she pronounced it "House-ton"—was convinced that there never would be a country like Great Britain, that nobody could be as good as a Briton and that an Englishman was "worth 10 foreigners."

She was a great aviation and yachting enthusiast and spent millions in pursuit of these hobbies, particularly in a fiery campaign for a huge British air force.

She gave $500,000 toward the Schneider Trophy air race in 1932, when Britain won the world's air speed prize. She watched the race from her yacht, Liberty, on which a huge electric sign flashed the word "Victory."

Backed Everest Flight.

Her millions financed a flight over Mount Everest in 1933 because, as she said, she wanted to "prove to India that not all Englishmen are degenerate."

In 1932 Ramsay MacDonald, then Prime Minister, refused her offer of a $1,000,000 gift to the government for national defense. She had a heart attack and described herself as "tossing in bed, anguishing for England."

A year later she offered a similar amount for air defense but MacDonald again turned it down.

She gave thousands on thousands of pounds to charity, mostly religious.

Next to Baldwin, her pet aversion was MacDonald whom she baited relentlessly in her Saturday Review.

Once her yacht toured the coast of England with the words, "Down with MacDonald, the traitor!" spelled out in electric lights strung between its masts.

Three Dead After Freak Maryland Accident

James B. Rollison, Baltimore truck driver, died when his truck and trailer, shown, plunged from the highway after striking three other vehicles. Two other men were killed when the machine in which they were riding hit a car parked near the truck accident on the Bel Air road near Gunpowder Falls, Md.

Gifford Regrets A. T. & T. Entry Into Film Field

Forced to Back Hollywood Firms, Protect Sound Licenses, He Says.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 29.—The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. became more deeply involved with the motion picture business than it wished or anticipated, Walter S. Gifford, president of the big communications company, testified today at a Federal Communications Commission hearing.

Gifford, questioned by Samuel Becker, counsel to the commission, told how the telephone company, through its patent license and sales unit, Electrical Research Products, Inc., became a financial backer of certain movie producing companies during the depression years.

E. R. P. I., Gifford explained, put money into the movie enterprises to protect claims in connection with contract leases of E. R. P. I.'s sound equipment.

"We went much further into the field than we anticipated and much further than E. R. P. I. anticipated," Gifford said. "We got into it because of circumstances and conditions. It all started as a result of financial difficulties experienced by some studios.

Claims Public Benefits.

"E. R. P. I.'s entrance onto the motion picture business may have been unwise and unpractical from the Bell System's standpoint, but it worked out to the public's benefit by making sound pictures better."

Gifford said that from the time he became president of American Telephone in 1925 his policy was to "stay out" of fields not directly related to communications development. He expressed the opinion laboratory research in "by-products," in which some of the E. R. P. I. executives previously were interested, according to memoranda placed in the record, was "unpractical."

"We are not financing any new pictures," he asserted.

Recalls Conditions.

Concerning E. R. P. I.'s investment of $2,000,000 in Universal Corporation debenture stock, on which testimony was given yesterday by Whitford Kane, E. R. P. I. executive vice president, Gifford said it was prompted by much the same conditions that caused E. R. P. I. to advance the old Fox Film Co. more than $14,000,000 a few years ago. In each case E. R. P. I. had had rental and license claims.

Earlier in the session John E. Otterson, former president of E. R. P. I., testified regarding loans made by his company in 1929 to Fox Film, then controlled by William Fox. After Fox lost control of the company around the end of 1929, these loans were repaid.

Harley L. Clarke, Midwestern capitalist, gained control of Fox early in 1930 and in that year E. R. P. I. made fresh advances.

The hearing, held before Commissioners Paul A. Walker and Thad Brown, will be resumed on January 8 in Washington.

Mellon's Firm Advances Plan Of Coal Control

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Dec. 29.—A new plan for Federal regulation of the soft coal industry was advanced today by the Pittsburgh Coal Co., a Mellon interest, at an operators' conference in this resort town.

Details of the plan laid before the operators by J. D. A. Morrow, Pittsburgh Coal president, were not disclosed immediately.

It was understood, however, the plan provided for drastic amendment of the antitrust laws as they affect the coal industry and much looser Federal restrictions than the old Guffey control act set up.

More than 50 operators gathered in a huge hotel perched high in southern West Virginia's rain-drenched mountains to discuss new Federal legislation to replace the outlawed Guffey act.

Among them were some of the bitterest opponents of Federal regulation two years ago.

Ruddy-faced, rotund Charles P. O'Neill, president of the United Eastern Coal Sales Corporation and leader of the fight for the old Guffey bill, presided.

When talking "off the record," most of the producers said legislation was inevitable and the big issue before the industry was what kind of legislation to work for.

Senator Joseph F. Guffey (Democrat), Pennsylvania, was understood to have told several producers in Washington yesterday that he would reintroduce his second bill the day Congress convened, and that amendments were up to the United Mine Workers of America and the industry.

This bill, designed to replace the first act, was killed in the Senate by a filibuster last spring.

It contained little more than the price-fixing provisions of the first act. The Supreme Court did not touch upon these in holding the first act unconstitutional because of its labor provisions.

Antarctic Scout Weds Sweetheart

Meadville, Pa., Dec. 29 (AP).—Paul Siple today married the girl he won in a romance that started on a college campus and developed—with the help of radiograms—in Little America.

From the Antarctic, where he was a member of expeditions led by Admiral Richard E. Byrd, Siple flashed messages—"Well, happy, love"—to Ruth Johannesmeyer.

From her Meadville home she sent back her answers to the youth who was picked from among all the Nation's Boy Scouts to go with Byrd to Little America on the admiral's first expedition.

Siple went along on the second trip as the expedition's chief biologist. He and Miss Johannesmeyer were married in Ford Chapel at Meadville College, where they met as students.

Alabama Receipts Tax To Bring Court Fight

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 29 (AP).—Alabama merchants today decided to carry to the courts their fight against the State's gross receipts tax, which goes into effect Friday.

Members of the Consumers Anti-Sales Tax Association agreed to push a test case against the 1½ per cent tax on retail sales.

Prospects of a renewed tax fight in the special session Legislature, which reconvenes here January 5, were seen in resolutions adopted at the anti-tax meeting condemning the general sales tax bill introduced in the House before Christmas adjournment.

Agrarian Party To Be Formed In Netherlands

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, Dec. 29.—The rise of a new Agrarian party in the Netherlands, dominated by Sir Henri Deterding, may result from the oil magnate's large-scale purchases of Dutch farm products for Germany, officials here said today.

Another result may be preferential treatment for Sir Henri's oil interest in a grateful Germany, these authorities indicated.

Sir Henri, chairman of the Royal Dutch Petroleum Co., recently married to a German woman, yesterday announced he was making available 10,000,000 guilders (about $5,400,000) to buy products of Dutch farms—which have had a hard time finding markets—for shipment to Germany, where shortage of foodstuffs is a serious problem.

Official circles in Berlin expressed belief both countries would receive benefits worth many times the initial 10,000,000 guilders.

The oil magnate, a German official said, long has been critical because the Dutch government artificially limits farm production on the ground the country is surfeited with unmarketable produce. Again and again he is said to have berated Dutch farmers for selling to Britain below cost while taking big profits from sales to Germany.

England, he argued, never can become a first-class market for The Netherlands because she has dominions and colonies as well as the Scandinavian countries to supply dairy products, Germany, The Netherlands' next door neighbor, is her logical market, he contended.

Sir Henri, officials said, already has obtained permits necessary for consigning his purchases to Germany.

Blizzard Isolates 300 Indians Saying Prayers for Health

Gallup, N. Mex., Dec. 29 (AP).—The friendly winds that had carried aloft their chanted prayers for health turned upon 300 Navajo Indian men, women and children today with icy, snow laden ferocity, marooning them in an isolated valley west of here.

The sudden, angry blizzard swept across the red rocks of eastern Arizona's Painted Desert at the close of one of the most colorful healing ceremonies of the Navajo people—their "mountain chant."

Indian service trucks struggled tonight to break through more than 25 miles of snow covered road from Ganado trading post, and officials of the vast Navajo reservation expressed fear of serious consequences if they failed.

The Indians had assembled near Wide Ruin for the ceremony, petitioning the Great Spirit to restore the health of an ailing tribesman.

Bishop Praises Edward For Service to Britain

London, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Bishop of Lichfield, disregarding the recent plea of the Archbishop of Canterbury to "turn from the past to the future," commended former King Edward today as giving "unselfish, effective service" to his nation.

"As for the closing incidents of his reign, it is not for us to judge," the Right Rev. John Augustine Kempthorne wrote in his diocesan magazine.

Cafe Racket Figure Ends Life in New York

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Max Pincus, 56, awaiting trial on indictments based on an investigation of restaurant rackets, today fell six floors to his death from a Bronx apartment house.

Witnesses told police that Pincus lowered himself on a ledge, hung there for several minutes while they tried to dissuade him from suicide, and let go. Pincus, president of a restaurant workers union was to go on trial January 4 on charges that he and 12 others used "fake" strikes to extort money from restaurant owners.

New Germ Causes Water Test Errors

Indianapolis, Dec. 29 (AP).—A new germ which interferes with the work of public health officials in testing water supplies was reported to the Society of American Bacteriologists here today.

This germ destroys the bacteria whose presence in samples of drinking water shows that the water is unsafe. It gets into the health officer's samples and makes his answers wrong.

The germ is a heretofore unrecognized species of pseudomonas, and was described by W. B. West, of the Arizona State Laboratory at Tucson. Several varieties of the germ are known. One of them causes blue milk. Another reduces nitrates. A third is dangerous to health.

The new pseudomonas was found in 7 per cent of all the water supplies received at the State laboratory.

How Are You Feeling Today?

ARE you nervous . . . weak . . . rundown? Are you able to do your housework as easily as you used to? Does the world look drab and dull? Do you feel cross . . . irritable . . . blue? Do you cry for no good reason? Do you lie down often?

Don't be discouraged. Perhaps all you need to put you on your feet once more is that good old reliable medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound. Made from Mother Nature's own roots and herbs, it has helped four generations of American women to feel better and look better. It MUST be good when so many praise it. Why don't you get a bottle today? All druggists sell it.

"I Wanted To Be By Myself"

says Mrs. Mildred Comstock of Box 375, Tonkawa, Oklahoma.

"At the Change I thought I was losing my mind. I had indigestion from a nervous stomach, terrible headaches, I lost weight and was blue and discouraged. My sister-in-law told me to take your Vegetable Compound. I took four bottles and I also followed your fine advice in your little book on health. Now I can do all my work and I am gaining every day."

"It Keeps Me Feeling Good and Looking Young"

says Mrs. Clara D. Ambrose of 105 West Poplar Avenue Wildwood, N. J.

"I started taking your Vegetable Compound when my first baby was born, 19 years ago. I felt terribly sick and nervous and my back ached all the time. I took five bottles then and since then I usually take it Spring and Fall. I am now 36 years old. I have a daughter 19 and a boy 17, and I am often taken for their sister when I go walking with them."

Ask Your Neighbors About This Medicine

"I Had Trouble Every Month Until I Took Your Wonderful Medicine"

says Miss Ella Nelson of 445 Nicollet Avenue, North Mankato, Minnesota.

"Before I took the Vegetable Compound I was irregular, had terrible sick headaches, felt tired and had no pep. I felt mean and everything used to bother me so. I was so nervous that I could hardly work. So many people recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I got a bottle. It did me so much good that I kept on. Now I am much better, do not have the pains and am able to work. I am glad to tell other girls and women how good it is."

G-Men to Push Search for Md. Farmer's Killer

Suspected Aide of Reed Seized in Boston for Rockville Police.

William B. Reed, kill-crazy former convict, who 10 years ago was the bad boy of Four Corners, Md., yesterday became one of the most thoroughly hunted fugitives in the United States, as Federal agents joined with police of Maryland and other States in an effort to run him down.

Since October, when he was released from the Maryland House of Correction after a term for housebreaking, the 25-year-old "Willie" Reed has participated in two savage killings, two kidnapings and in numerous other crimes.

Once a petty housebreaker, he now is regarded as the most ruthles skiller at large. He has vowed he wil lshoot to kil lthe next time officers try to apprehend him.

A few hours after the Department of Justice joined the hunt yesterday two Montgomery County officers, accompanied by 25 Boston policemen and a Federal agent, raided a Boston hatel where Reed was believed to be hiding. They missed him, but they captured his friend, Richard Stockton, another outlaw from nearby Maryland.

Wanted in Slaying.

Stockton, according to Maryland authorities, was a member of Reed's mob and took part in the holdup of a taxicab driver in Takoma Park early last month. He is wanted, too, in connection with the shooting a year ago of W. C. Giddings, owner of a general store at Burnt Mills.

Stockton will be brought back to Rockville by Detective Sergt. Theodore Vollten and Sergt. Leroy Rodgers, of the Montgomery County police force, who went to Boston seeking the bloodthirsty Reed.

The search for the young desperado was concentrated last night in Boston, where the Associated Press reported two Maryland officers and a Federal agent seized a friend of Reed's in a downtown hotel. The friend, believed to know where Reed is, was held for questioning.

Earlier in the evening the two Maryland officers, Detective Sergt. Theodore Vollten and Sergt. Leroy Rodgers, of the Montgomery County police, led 25 Cambridge policemen in a futile raid on a Cambridge apartment house, the Associated Press said.

Montgomery County officials refused to reveal the name of Reed's friend or whether they suspected Reed was hiding in Boston. The presence of the Federal agent in the Boston arrest was the first outward indication the Justice Department had taken up the hunt.

Yesterday representatives of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, conferred with State's Attorney James H. Pugh in Rockville and promised to add their crack force of agents to those already seeking the fugitive.

It was agreed Reed clearly had violated the Lindbergh law in kidnaping a colored taxicab driver in Washington and forcing him at the point of a gun to drive him and his two confederates to Richmond. It also was agreed he had violated a Federal law in stealing automobiles and taking them from one State to another.

Criminal as Youth.

Reed, whose crime career started when he was a boy, became Maryland's No. 1 desperado after his release from the Maryland House of Correction in October.

He and his henchmen—War Joseph Kirby, 21, and Lawrence Gingell, 20-year-old former caddy of Kensington, Md.—planned to hold up a number of golf clubs in nearby Maryland last month. They actually fired shots at the Manor Club, but were frightened away.

They were on their way to hold up the Indian Spring Club when Reed changed his plans and decided to rob Elwood Matthews, a 68-year-old farmer, of Silver Springs.

After robbing Farmer Matthews, the trio dragged him two miles and, after tying a rock to him, dumped him in a stream near Burnt Mills. The rock became loose and the old man began struggling in the water.

"Save me!" he cried.

Reed, according to alleged confessions by Kirby and Gingell, who have since been captured, yelled:

"I'll save you, you ———"

Thereupon, his companions told police, he pulled out a revolver and shot old Matthews three times.

Thereafter Reed and his subalterns boarded a taxicab in Washington, pointed guns at the colored driver, and forced him to drive them to Richmond.

On Thanksgiving Day the trio, according to police, committed a savage crime near Sutton, W. Va., victim of which was W. Earle Dollman, 34-year-old Philadelphia salesman and former West Virginia athlete.

Dollman was robbed, then killed, and then cremated in his own automobile.

Ten days later, the trio struck again.

P. P. Wilson, Charleston, W. Va., bank employe, was driving through the city when three men stopped him, jumped into his car and with pistols forced him to drive to the outskirts of the city. They took $40 from him, forced him from the car and fled in it.

In a gun battle that followed, War Joseph Kirby, who had become Reed's pal in the Maryland House of Correction, was wounded and captured.

This Accent on Youth:

"The Trouble Is—"

Even Parents Disagree On "What's Best," Pampering Or Hardships, Nor Is Younger Generation In Accord On Solution.

This is the third of a series of daily articles on modern youth, its hopes, its problems and its place in the America of today.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

"WHAT YOUTH needs——"

Utter these three words anywhere and you will find a number of ways to complete the sentence. An exceptional young man or woman may tell you youth needs most "to be let alone." The average youngster will probably say youth needs a chance in this turbulent world; permanent jobs, security, enough leisure for cultural pursuits. That, at least, is what two-thirds of the ones we interviewed told us.

But a middle-aged Washington lawyer who has accumulated a fortune in the past 30 years had a different ending for the sentence. "I'll tell you what youth needs—a smaller wishbone and a bigger backbone," he said. "From what I've observed in my own family and elsewhere, young men and women expect everything for nothing these days. Maybe we parents are to blame; maybe we've tried too hard to protect them against the hardships we went through in our youth; maybe we've brought them up to be hothouse plants instead of sturdy oaks. Anyway, they're soft. Many of them want jobs, yes. Easy jobs. Short hours and big pay. Work? That's exactly what they don't want."

The average boy and girl of his generation learned early in life that "you've got to work to get ahead," he said. He cited his own experience as a case in point. He was reared on a farm. There were five boys and three girls in his family, "and every one of us shouldered some responsibility from the time he was big enough to walk. When I was 14 I milked five cows every morning, walked eight miles to school and chopped wood at night. At 16 I started to college, assuming the entire burden of paying my expenses. I managed it by working between classes and at night in a restaurant across from the campus. Sure, it was hard. It was hard, too, when I finished college and had to ride horseback 10 miles a day, through all kinds of weather, to teach a rural school for $30 a month. Five years later, after I made up my mind to be a lawyer, it was still hard when I had to pay for my law course by tending the furnace and waiting on tables in the dormitory where I lived. But that's how I got through."

Elders Given Blame For Waiting Tactics.

He was confident only exceptional young men and women today are willing to undergo hardships in order to earn an education or to find and keep a job. "Trouble is, most modern boys and girls are sitting back waiting for something to be done for them. If oldsters would adopt different tactics in dealing with them—would let them know their only chance lies in their own endeavor, rather than in any program being planned for them—we wouldn't have any youth problem."

A professor in a Washington university bore out this opinion in his diagnosis of what youth needs. "Less pampering," was the way he put it. "The worst thing we can do for our boys and girls is to make them think they're the victims of the depression and must therefore be made wards of the Government. In throwing the spotlight of attention on their problems, we've already made them feel sorry for themselves. That's fatal."

A different view of the youth picture was presented by Jay Jerome Williams, publisher of the Parade of Youth, a newspaper magazine reflecting the activities of young people throughout the country. "I can give you scores of case histories to prove plenty of our young men and women don't feel sorry for themselves," he said.

In this connection he mentioned the 18-year-old Wisconsin girl who, after her father's death, assumed single-handed the burden of editing and publishing the newspaper her father had established. He described the career of the Indiana boy who at the age of 17 had bought a $2,500 house and was paying for it with money made by delivering newspapers. He told of the 19-year-old Ohio youth who had gained all kinds of experience as an airplane pilot and was on the way to China to be instructor in a flying school.

Cases Declared Typical Of Younger Generation.

The Parade of Youth publisher could have gone on indefinitely in this vein, but we interrupted him. Weren't those enterprising boys and girls he had mentioned too exceptional to be considered in our resume of average youth? No, he didn't think so. In his opinion, they were just as typical of the younger generation as the befogged and defeated youths who were discontented because there weren't enough soft jobs to go around. "Young people today are just like the rest of us," he said. "When confronted with challenging responsibility, they generally measure up. If some of them seem to lack ambition and haven't a zest for hard work it's usually because their parents have shielded them too surely against hardship and any real chance for development."

In a talk before a recent meeting of the Regional Association of Deans of Women Dr. Irma E. Voight, of Ohio University, deplored the fact that so many modenr youn people seem to have lost their rightful heritage—the qualities of persistence, loyalty and fortitude that took their pioneering forefathers to the top. "Why have they lost it? Perhaps the answer is to be found in the fact that we as adults seem to have lost it," she said. "When the war ended we somehow dropped the line of continuity that linked us with the American of pioneer days. The post-war period became a starting point for a new way of life for many. Into this atmosphere of newness the present generation came upon the scene. Adults seemed to be going on a wild holiday. False ideals, false virtues, false goals created an artificial and blatant attitude on the part of society which childhood seized upon as a toy. It was colorful, noisy and distracting—three qualities children demand in a toy."

Dean Voight said, however, that she was confident youth would eventually regain the qualities that sustained the pioneers. "It must," she said, "for there is as much work to be done today as there was in the time when covered wagons lumbered West toward the frontier."

Yet two-thirds of the young men and women we interviewed were of the opinion the world has no real work for them today. "All the odds are against us. We can't get jobs. We haven't half the chance that youth has had before," was the way one boy expressed the lot of his lost generation. "We'd have some of the opportunities we deserve if the American Youth bill could be passed, or if the NYA could work out some sort of program that would provide something for us besides a dole."

Federal Aid Breeds Contempt for Parents.

This attitude toward the NYA was voiced by a number of girls and boys to whom we talked. It also came to the fore indirectly in an interview we had with a mother whose two sons and a daughter are receiving aid from the NYA. "The boys are in high school," she said. "They earn $6 a month to pay for lunches, pencils, tablets and any books not furnished by the school. My daughter, 18, in her first year at college, gets $15 a month to help pay her expenses.

"Yes, there's no doubt about it, the NYA is making it possible for them to get an education. I guess I ought to be grateful. But sometimes I'm not, because the boys and the girl consider themselves absolutely independent of their father and me. They actually look down on us because we haven't been able to provide for them so they wouldn't have to get help from the Government. In their eyes we're failures. They won't listen to us about anything, and won't take a bit of advice from us on how to spend their money. But they don't have any too much respect for the NYA, either," she went on. "They think they deserve a lot more each month than they get from that."

The American youth situation as seen through the eyes of a foreigner was revealed to us recently by a woman who was formrly a European publicity director for a United States steamship company and had charge of organizing tours for American college students.

"My work in that capacity taught me a good deal about the youth of this country," she said. "I learned that American boys and girls were harder to please than any others. I discovered they wanted the best of everything and were willing to give nothing in return. When I came over here and observed them in their homes I understood why. Parents here spoil their children, give them no responsibility at home, and rear them to believe they deserve such special privileges as good jobs, security, leisure and luxuries that are the rewards of more prosperous times. No wonder American youth is soft, and demanding and restless. It is the natural result of papering parents."

A local employer who passes on applications of hundreds of young men and women each year said that in his opinion far too many fathers and mothers take the initiative in obtaining jobs for their sons and daughters.

As an example, he cited the case of a 20-year-old girl who was graduated from an exclusive finishing school last year. She wanted to work in a certain office. Her father obtained the position for her. She resigned two weeks later because, as she expressed it, "The salary was too low" (it was $25 a week), "the hours were too long" (they were from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.), and she "had to sit in a straight chair all day while the other employees had swivel chairs."

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Steps Pledged By Roosevelt To Help Labor

enced as a result in obtaining bids on Government contracts. The Labor Department, however, announced yesterday that during the last 10 days 12 agencies of the Government had awarded 136 contracts, worth $5,791,307, and containing agreements to comply with the Walsh-Healey act.

Government control over labor is exercised to some extent by the National Labor Relations Board. However, it has no authority to specify wages, hours or working conditions, but does have the power to maintain the right of collective bargaining. Validity of this law is now under consideration by the Supreme Court.

A deluge of labor legislation is expected with the opening of Congress. In addition, a new drive is under way for ratification by the States of the long-pending child-labor amendment. Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, is considering introduction of a constitutional amendment giving the Government power to regulate industry.

Perhaps the most outstanding of the proposed bills is the O'Mahoney measure providing for Federal incorporation and licensing of all industries in and affecting interstate commerce. This bill would require licensees to maintain hour and wage standards and would ban child labor.

Many Plans Discussed.

Other approaches may include the perennial 30-hour week bill advocated by labor unions, revival of the Guffey law and various attempts to provide substitutes for the NRA through codes and agreements.

The President's pronouncement came as strikes and threats of strikes were growing. The automobile industry has been crippled by walkouts and strikes in the steel and bituminous coal industries may be called in the near future. Labor groups, which actively supported President Roosevelt in his campaign, are demanding White House backing in their campaign for union recognition and higher wages.

Meanwhile, the National Labor Relations Board, in a year-end statement, announced that it had acted in 1,639 case involving 627,145 workers. Included were 269 strike cases of which 187 were settled. In addition, the board said, 86 threatened strikes were averted.

Paris Guard Dies In Strike Battle

Paris, Dec. 29 (AP).—One death resulted from a day of strike troubles in Paris. As mounted Republican Guards struggled with a crowd of demonstrating city employes in front of the municipal building a guardman was thrown from his horse and injured fatally.

This was the climax of a day of labor agitations growing out of workers' demands for higher wages to compenste for devaluation of the franc and resulting higher costs of living.

Premier Blum personally intervened to arrange an agreement between striking employes and operators of Paris food stores to end a walkout which threatened the city's food supplies, but as dark fell riots broke out in front of the municipal building when city employes thronged in the square there to demonstrate for higher pay. These disorders ended about 7 p. m., when the municipal authorities agreed to consider the demonstrators' demands.

Publisher Dies in Crash.

Salem, Ohio, Dec. 29 (AP).—Frank A. Hoiles, 70, publisher of The Alliance, Ohio, Review, was killed today in an automobile collision north of here. Highway patrolmen reported Hoiles' car and another driven by Clyde Cross, 38, of Weirton, W. Va., crashed at an intersection.

Hangman's Noose Breaks; Sikhs Make Slayer a Holy Man

Shanghai, Dec. 29 (AP).—Atma Singh, huge British Indian who survived a hanging today when the rope parted, may recover from his injuries to find himself venerated as a holy man by his thousands of compatriots here.

What is of more substantial benefit, he may find his life spared by British-dominated police force of demned him to die for the murder of a fellow policeman.

Atma Singh, who served in the British-Dominated police force of the Shanghai international settlement, killed another Sikh constable who insulted his wife. He was sentenced to death and a special hangman was brought from Hongkong for the execution.

As the burly Sikh plunged through the gallows' trap-door the rope parted. He fell heavily to the ground. Physicians said he suffered brain concussion. Tonight he was still unconscious in the police hospital.

Shanghai's Indian community totaling several thousands regards Atma Singh's survival as an act of Heaven. Especially his Sikh coreligionists regard him as a man favored by the deities and therefore a minor divinity himself.

Auto Accidents Blamed For Increased Insanity

Chicago, Dec. 29 (AP).—Horatio M. Pollock, of the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene said today insanity was on the increase in the United States. He blamed automobile accidents for an undetermined, but large percentage of recent cases. Pollock addressed a meeting of the American Sociological Society.

Statistics compiled from the State hospitals showed, he said, the Nation now has an average of 317 persons out of every 100,000 who are receiving, or have received, treatment for mental disease.

Strength In Flexibility.

Advantages and disadvantages of limiting the Presidential term to six years and forbidding re-election have been frequently discussed ever since the Constitution was adopted. Persuasive arguments have been presented on both sides. But the people have seen no good reason to change the existing system. Representative Tinkham's revival of the issue is interesting chiefly because he advocates the six-year term as a safeguard against dictatorship.

Mr. Tinkham's interest in preserving democratic government is shared by virtually all citizens. But there will be sharp disagreement with his thesis that this objective can best be attained by limiting every President and Vice President to six years in those respective offices. Theoretically such a change in the organic law would place an obstacle in the way of any President with dictatorial ambitions. Actually, however, the life of the Constitution might be shortened by the inclusion of such an inflexible rule. For in a crisis political parties and the electorate might not be inclined to observe it.

The complete nullification of the Weimar constitution in Germany is timely evidence that no charter of government by itself can hold back a tide of popular sentiment. In many respects the constitution of the German republic was an ideal document. If anything, its authors undertook to provide for too many contingencies. But when Hitler became the dominant influence in Germany he immediately used the legislative powers granted by that document to set up a personal dictatorship. The mere letter of law is not a sufficient guarantee of liberty.

Government by the people cannot be preserved by making the Constitution less responsive to popular demands. The next change ought to be in the direction of greater, and not less, flexibility. Tradition has already provided an effective bar against any President serving more than eight years. That rule is no more likely to be violated than a constitutional amendment imposing a more drastic restriction.

The strongest argument for the six-year term is that it would remove the temptation of every President to build up a political machine through the distribution of patronage. But some Presidents, even though they could not be re-elected, might use Federal jobs to strengthen the party to which they adhere. Civil service reform may be more readily achieved by a direct attack upon the spoils system.

The Palos Incident.

The crisis developing out of the seizure by agents of the Spanish government of the German steamer Palos has temporarily been eased. Following strong representations from Berlin, the authorities at Bilbao have released the ship and its crew. Thus the German government cannot, as some feared it would, use the Palos incident as the pretext for the dispatch to Spain of a large expeditionary force and the blockade of Spanish loyalist ports.

With tensions occasioned by the Spanish civil war already close to breaking point, the respite provided by the solution of the Palos episode is welcome. Yet it is eloquent of the disorderly state of present-day international relations that the episode should have aroused as much fear as it did.

If, as the Spanish government charged, the Palos was carrying contraband intended for the rebels, the loyalists at Bilbao had every right under international law, to seize the ship and its cargo. Certainly it was no difficult matter to determine whether the cargo consisted of contraband or not. It throws an interesting and somewhat sinister light on Germany's policies that it chose to prejudge the matter without demanding an investigation.

Regardless of the disposition of the Palos incident itself, the underlying issues have therefore not been disposed of at all. For it is unlikely that the Spanish government will sit by with folded hands while cargo after cargo from Germany is sent to the rebels. On the contrary, it will probably seek to intercept such shipments. And it is an ominous development that close on the heels of the seizure of the Palos Germany has seen fit to send a warship to Bilbao Harbor, presumably for the purpose of preventing any further interference with German ships suspected of carrying arms, munitions and other supplies to Franco.

It is activities of this sort, as well as the open recruiting in Germany of men for Spanish military service, which explains why, despite the superhuman efforts of France and Great Britain, now aided in part by Italy, the Spanish crisis continues to be a cause for acute alarm in Europe.

Although the reports that Hitler was planning immediately to send large bodies of troops to Spain have been shown to be false, the possibility of a more active intervention by the Reich in the Spanish situation remains. In German eyes Spain continues to be regarded as a colonial area.

Fruits Of A Bungling Policy.

Additional light is thrown on the inevitable deficiencies of mandatory neutrality legislation by the licensing of a shipment to the Madrid government of nearly $3,000,000 worth of airplanes and equipment.

Under the idiotic policy so far insisted upon by Congress the Department of State is denied any discretion as to the granting of such licenses. The moral is clear as the incident now stands. And that moral will be heavily underscored if there is shown to be any truth in the rumor that this shipment may have been arranged with prior knowledge on the part of another government much interested in the Spanish embroglio.

From its very nature a mandatory neutrality policy can never be expected to cope with unexpected developments. It specifies what shall be done under such circumstances as can be envisaged in advance and is necessarily silent in the enormous field of unpredictable possibilities.

Our present legislation, for instance, makes no provision as to the course to be followed in the case of civil as opposed to international war. Worse than that, it tacitly denies the President and the Department of State any authority to deal with complications affecting this country arising from civil war elsewhere. There is now nothing other than the purely voluntary restraint of American munitions manufacturers to prevent them from pouring quantities of powder into the Spanish fire.

Now that the damage is done Congress will doubtless try to plug up this particular hole. But the probability of other channels of evasion remaining, or being developed, will still be there.

Despite the pathetic faith of our people in the efficacy of mandatory laws it is all too obvious to the discerning that neutrality cannot be assured by legislation of this character. What it can and is doing, however, is to hamstring the peace-preservation efforts of the Administration. As the newly licensed airplane exporter exultingly pointed out yesterday, he has acted "on the strength of and in compliance with the existing laws"—although these were supposed to insure insulation of America against just such shocks as this.

Yet nothing would have been easier than to avert the current incident. If the last Congress had merely empowered the President to apply an embargo on munitions exports as circumstances made such action advisable, the license issued on Monday need never have been granted.

From the outset of the Spanish civil war, which had the effrontery to start when our Congress was not in session, such an embargo would unquestionably have been rigorously applied. This action, moreover, would have been taken in concert with other powers deeply interested in limiting the effects of the fighting in Spain, thus strengthening the peace forces against those who are only too clearly willing to turn this conflict into a world war.

Instead of following this rational and constructive line Congress has created a situation which makes it entirely legal for us to intervene actively on either side, thus presenting a perfect argument for those powers which would like to do the same. Hitler will be far more dull than he generally shows himself if he does not take our official approval of a heavy munitions shipment to the Madrid government as good excuse for more open support of the rebel forces which he is backing.

As has been frequently pointed out in these columns, a mandatory neutrality policy is in no sense a guarantee of peace for this country. It is, on the contrary, an incitement to war which, once well under way, is all too likely to engulf this country no matter what laws against our participation are on the statute books.

In the bemused activities of the advocates of mandatory neutrality policy is found all the stark tragedy of the classic drama. By their fumbling emotionalism they are precipitating the very disasters which they seek to avert.

No American Goebbels Wanted.

As was to be expected, the Administration has promptly repudiated the rumor that it is planning to centralize all governmental publicity in one great press bureau. It could not have done otherwise without running contrary to the basic spirit of American institutions.

There is no place in the Government of the United States for any agency even remotely resembling the propaganda ministries to be found in Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy. We have no need of American Goebbels or Cianos. Indeed, any system that tends to create a barrier between the press on the one hand and Government officials on the other, that substitutes officially inspired "hands-outs" for free investigation into the actual conduct of Government, is utterly out of harmony with the American system.

There is no doubt that, in the interests of economy, many of the now numerous governmental press agencies could properly be cut down or eliminated altogether. In this as in many other particulars governmental reorganization is a crying need.

But there is a wide gulf between such salutary action and the creation of a centralized press and publicity bureau. Even if established with the best of intentions, to serve as a faithful sluiceway of information between the Government and the public, the inevitable tendency would be for it to become not so much an instrument of enlightenment as one of concealment.

A Premature Proposal.

It seems decidedly premature to discuss problems of debt reduction while Federal deficits still continue to add billions yearly to outstanding Federal indebtedness. Nevertheless, Prof. Simeon E. Leland, of the University of Chicago, had the temerity to raise this issue in an address before the American Economic Association.

He was not worried about the ability of the Government to carry the present debt load, or even an increased amount of debt, with interest rates at their present low level. But, as he said, "the ability to carry a debt is not the only criterion of credit capacity." A government that makes no efforts to reduce the size of its obligations when times are good or improving is likely to find its credit status impaired when the next depression, or a possible war, makes fresh borrowing necessary.

Prof. Leland therefore urges imposition of the "largest possible amount of taxes for debt repayment which can be collected and still allow a reasonable rate of business expansion." While this recommendation looks toward a goal at which any far-seeing Administration should certainly aim, it is obviously impracticable as an immediate program of action. Before we heroically resolve to cover budgetary deficits and pay off indebtedness, too, out of the proceeds of current taxes, steps must be taken to reduce the scale of expenditure until it is well within the limits of taxable capacity.

During the present fiscal year the Federal Government expects to collect a greater sum from taxpayers than it has obtained at any time since the years of record receipts from war-time financing. Yet it is estimated that this sum will fall short by at least $1,500,000,000, and possibly more, of the amount needed to cover outlays, even if no provision is made for debt retirement and no account taken of veteran bonus payments.

What the country needs is not more taxes but a more equitable tax system and less spending. Income taxes are already excessive in upper income groups, while the levies imposed on corporate income and individual estates are high enough to threaten the process of capital accumulation. Hence, if it should become necessary to tap new sources of revenue, a long overdue reform of the tax system may be hastened.

It is neither practicable nor economically desirable, however, to lay fresh burdens upon taxpayers to finance a spending program of existing proportions, disregarding provisions for debt reduction. The immediately important objective is to institute economies that will bring the budget into balance and put an end to debt increases. Until we have definite evidence of retrenchment to show that progress is being made in that direction, the debt reduction problem will remain a topic for academic discussion.

Brilliant Medical Victory.

One dash of silver in the dark cloud of the Ethiopian conquest is belatedly supplied by the final report of Surgeon General Aldo Castellani, inspector general of military and civil medical services in East Africa during the hostilities. The renowned expert in tropical diseases is more happily known otherwise for the chair he holds at Tulane University in New Orleans and for his contributions as visiting lecturer at the London School of Tropical Medicine.

The health of 500,000 men in the Italian expeditionary forces was his responsibility. Never before had so many white troops been massed in a tropical zone, parts of it with a climate classed as torrid. White forces in the Boer war seldom exceeded 200,000 and their operations were conducted entirely in subtropical regions. Yet the number of deaths from disease in the Boer war as compared with the number of deaths from wounds was in the ratio of almost two to one. Typhoid alone in South Africa incapacitated 59,750 British troops and accounted for 8,227 deaths.

On such a basis, the Italians might have expected 20,000 deaths from disease among their half million troops. Instead, final reckonings show 22 officers and 577 men lost through illness. Not a single case of smallpox, plague, cholera, typhus or scurvy was reported. It is estimated that there were 20,000 cases of typhus among the Ethiopian forces and foreign physicians along the Somaliland front reported 30,000 cases of scurvy in the natives' ranks. The simple prophylactic of a lemon a day protected the Italians entirely from scurvy.

More than lemons, however, were needed to ward off the other traditional scourges of military expeditions. Elaborate field and base hospitals, complete with the most modern laboratories and equipment, were called into play. Inasmuch as Dr. Castellani drew on knowledge belonging to the whole world in ordering these eminently successful defenses, the whole world can rejoice in this one constructive phase of the Italian victory.

Traffic Bureau Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just a suggestion, please. Why not have one of your reporters check up on the service John Public is getting in this city in connection with issuance of auto licenses; on the policy of "the public be damned" that characterizes the Traffic Bureau, from end to end?

1. The hours in which this necessary license may be obtained: Why should anyone desiring a license be required to take a day off from his job to obtain same? Necessarily there must be a rush period because of the limited time in which the license may be obtained to conform to the law. Why should not the hours be lengthened in which to obtain this necessary adjunct to driving without police interference, according to notices of various kinds?

Other branches of the Federal Government are working employes overtime at the whim of supervisors, and oftentimes unnecessarily, but thus providing additional loafing periods for the irresponsibles, just as many of whom are in snivel service as are not, proportionately, and nothing is thought of it by the higher-ups. But some overtime in this case would be a worth-while service to the public whom these employes are paid to serve.

2. Why should District employes not extend courteous treatment to the people from whom they are collecting taxes? Just note the difference in this Traffic Bureau at Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue and in any one of the public utility offices in the city—what a contrast! Instead of dictators, why not have public servants?

A little light on the treatment being accorded the citizenship of the District by those in the District's official family might be helpful.

A SUFFERER.

Washington, Dec. 26.

Upholding The Archbishops.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since The Post has given space in its columns to a bitter communication from "Episcopalian," permit me, a decided non-Episcopal churchman, to wish, with most intelligent people in our land, that we had more Canterburys and Yorks among our clergymen!

If the leaders of the Established Church of England happened to be mature men, all the more reason why their sense of propriety should have been outraged. Whatever Henry VIII did, or whatever the House of Stuart, singly or as a whole did, has no bearing on the Church of England in 1936. That church lays no claim to infallibility. In the name of decency and propriety these church leaders protested, but if any one can discover any bitterness in their words, he must look through glasses colored by gall. There was regret and confusion of humiliation; but nothing but the tenderness of faithful men who pronounced censure amidst tears.

Your correspondent is not content to say of the church dignitaries of England that they "rave, snarl and snap their teeth like dogs," but says they are like our Supreme Court, "old and foolish." One can scarcely imagine a man capable of writing who could give public utterance to such sentiments.

"Episcopalian" does not know that Charles Evans Hughes is one of the few men in our land whom our best people would be willing to follow blindfolded. Nor does he seem to know that the man once called "that mild old man, lonely and isolated" in the cabinet of Mr. Roosevelt, is more highly esteemed at home and abroad than any of the young and experimenting elements to be found in that respectable body. In fact, our own United States, having graduated so many of the present generation from the College of Moviedom, needs some Canterburys and Yorks to shelve the 42-year-old Edwards in various departments of our national life. Welcome, thrice welcome, ye men of age and sanity, when youth forgets decency and propriety!

J. O. KNOTT.

Washington, Dec. 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I venture a reply to "Episcopalian" in The Post of December 28.

If refusing to condone the act of a King in acquiring another's wife through collusion is puritanical, please add the name of this Episcopalian to those of the heads of the English Church in the list of Puritans.

I am so puritanical, though Protestant Episcopalian, that I not only endorse the strictures of the heads of the English Church against open and notorious wife stealing; but I endorse the attitude of Protestantism in the South, in its stand in the pending cultural conflict against making the nation alcoholic conscious.

If the Protestant Episcopal Church could be assured of an archbishop of the character of York and of Canterbury, it would be well to do so; but most likely he would be some old wet publicity seeker.

G. G. MOORE.

Washington, Dec. 28.

The Abolition Of War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "We must destroy war, or war will destroy us," is the plea in the message of Secretary Hull to the Pan-American Peace conference at Buenos Aires.

War cannot be destroyed until the evil destructive spiritual forces that foment and cause war are destroyed, such as greed, covetousness, fear, envy, inordinate pride, vanity, etc. While these forces can neither be seen nor felt, for the past 6,000 years they have exercised a far greater influence on human affairs than the constructive forces of love and charity and good will. These destructive forces, known as the spiritual forces of error, emanate from Satan, the god of this world (ii Cor. 4:4), and the constructive forces of charity and good will, known as the spirit of truth, emanate from Jehovah, God Almighty, I John 4: 6, 7, 8.

The outward manifestations of the spirit of error are religious intolerance, race hatreds, diplomatic intrigues, economic and social unrest, burdensome armaments and, finally, wars with all their attendant horrors, sufferings and deaths.

Six thousand years of history under the present powerful evil spiritual ruling forces of the world, Ephesians 6:12, should certainly teach us that no fleshly power or government can destroy war. No fleshly power or government has ever done so, nor will war be destroyed by any fleshly power or government or any combination of them, Isaiah 8: 9, 10.

War will never be destroyed by the present religious order known as Christendom or organized Christianity, which has only a form of godliness, but denies the power thereof. This power of destroying things that destroy and bringing eternal joy and happiness to humanity must be exercised during His second presence on earth by the risen Christ and His own selected Church, and cannot be carried into effect by a church system that is attempting to assume this honor unto itself.

C. A. M. WELLS.

Washington, Dec. 28.

Appraisal Of Government Salaries.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There are reports circulated that "a heavy offensive will be launched by those interested in Government employe affairs to gain pay increases for the workers of Uncle Sam."

The writer is familiar not only with Government service, but also with industry, and the professions, and it is his deliberate opinion that:

With few exceptions most Government employes are in the service because they couldn't make a go of it in private life.

That Government employes are far better paid and have far shorter hours than in industry.

That, for example, the service is filled with so-called lawyers who have had no business training and who never had a day in court, who are being paid anywhere from $3,000 to $8,000 a year, more than some of the Governors of States receive, and whom no lawyer in active practice would employ in his office at any salary.

That the stenographic and clerical forces in the Government service are vastly inferior to those in private employment. That their hours are easier and shorter, and that they are infinitely better paid than like help in private employment.

The trouble, Mr. Editor, is not with the salaries paid by the Government, for anyone with the slightest acquaintance with the service knows that most of such employes, considering their experience and qualifications, are greatly overpaid, but with the inequality of pay in the service among those who are doing the same kind of work. What is needed is not increase in salaries, but the devising of some system whereby salaries will be paid on the basis of service and the length thereof and not, as at present, on the basis of favoritism and political influence.

There are innumerable instances of men and women sitting side by side in the Government service doing identical work, and one may be getting $1,000 more pay than the other simply because they "speak the language of the tribe" and enjoy the good will of their immediate superiors, or because they have brought political influence to bear to get their increase in salary. If an employe is so unfortunate as not to enjoy the good will of his superior he will be kept down by adverse ratings, and has little to hope for in the way of salary increase unless he can secure strong political backing, which no self-respecting employe wishes to resort to. But when such backing is employed it is amusing to see with what alacrity the little chief, whose head is swollen by the exercise of authority and his own self-importance, will kowtow to the member of Congress and suddenly discover what a valuable man the particular employe is, when the probability is that the employe has ten times the ability and experience of his chief.

Finally, what is needed is not increase in salaries, but equality and justice in the rate of pay among employes doing the same work.

OBSERVER.

Washington, Dec. 28.

Museum Guard Holidays.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: While other Government workers were receiving about three and a half holidays for Christmas the guards of the Smithsonian Institution-National Museum were receiving one, and, of course, the same thing will happen again New Year's. Other than those two days the museum buildings are open the entire year, and, of course, there's a force of guards on duty even those days.

While most of the world is enjoying the Yule season these men are valiantly carrying out their many duties as usual, serving the public from all parts of the world, answering questions, showing them and explaining various exhibits, being cheerful and courteous and endeavoring to keep their spirits up during the Yule season so that others may enjoy themselves. But do you think they feel up to the occasion after having to tell their little ones that Santa was so very busy that he could just not get around, and that next Christmas he would probably fill both stockings to make up for having missed one?

Most of the guards in this department draw $96.50 in cash per month and after they pay their running expenses they have nothing left for Santa. Will not you try to help us get a little better pay for these men?

For a Famous Lover.

Duke of Windsor, on your own,
May you never miss that throne!
May you know no more fatigue
Down there in the minor league!

May you not deplore the day
That you threw the crown away
May you be a husband happy—
And perhaps, my boy, a pappy!

Rulers whose one goal is power,
Rulers with ambitions sour
Are so thick they quite distress you

We wish you people luck enough
To see through all that Nazi stuff—
To laugh as Germans used to do,
To eat a steak, and maybe two,
To pass your plate a second time
And not regard it as a crime;
To even ask for bread with butter
And not hear any Fuehrer mutter;
To get your balance and to see
Through bunk about supremacy,
To know that folks are not made happy
By merely being strong and scrappy!

Thoreau Would Now.

The time has come when Thoreau would take an interest in politics. He did so on two occasions, it will be remembered, when in protest against the fugitive slave law and against the Mexican War he refused to pay taxes. Gandhi learned much from his effective methods of gaining publicity. But now that soil conservation, blister rust eradication, flood control and irrigation are matters of governmental action, he would attend to constructive programs. He promised as much in "The Week on the Concord and the Merrimac Rivers," which he began almost a hundred years ago, for he wrote: "Generally speaking, the political news, whether domestic or foreign, might be written today for the next ten years with sufficient accuracy. Most revolutions in society have no power to interest, still less alarm us; but tell me that our rivers are drying up and the genus pine dying out in the country and I might attend."

Even during his life, Thoreau spoke out against the ruthless lumbering of the forests and of the unchecked fires making waste square miles of woodland. He would be the first to justify the expenditures of the CCC; yet at the same time he would certainly urge that care be taken not to tame all the wild country, leaving a heritage only of parks and reservations for those who want to escape temporarily from the restrictions of civilization to the hazards of a primitive freedom that knows no skyline motor highways, no guide posts and no signs prohibiting walking on the grass, picking the flowers, fishing in the streams or building campfires. To find these things today, if not to find deep rivers and the genus pine, he might like the Matanuska colonists in search of farms, have to go as far from Concord as Alaska.

Honor of a Family

By Ross O'Donoghue.

STARTING as an uneasy whisper, the great theme of war gradually mounts to a terrifying crescendo, blotting out the lesser motifs which animate the characters of this novel. Nevertheless surprising is the insistency with which the major strain of family pride recurs with great shells bursting and the Germans entering the provincial French town of Baulon.

Secluded in a gloomy old house which bore a few vestiges of its past prosperity, the Severins lived with but one idea in mind—the vindication of the family honor. Before Col. Severin's court-martial for running from the Prussians in 1870, the Severin name was a glorious one in the salons of Paris. Did not all the ladies fall in love with the young colonel's fine bearing and courtier ways? Did not all the blades vie with one another for the favor of his great actress sister, Therese Severin, whom many thought surpassed Bernhardt? In fact, so keen was the rivalry between these two superb figures of the stage that tradition has it that they once engaged in a duel in which the male seconds were severely wounded.

But all such splendid days were only memories, for 40 years had passed since she forsook the stage to follow into a self-imposed exile her brother whose valor had been impugned. There they plotted relentlessly to remove the spot from their family escutcheon. With the aid of his faithful old nurse of a wife and a couple of servants as old as themselves they planned for the great day. No effort was too great or expense impossible. What little money was obtainable was fed to the greedy, pompous provincial lawyer who continued to lure them on with a will-o'-the-wisp of a mysterious witness who, when he could be found, would justify the reopening of the case with a favorable account of events long past.

NOTWITHSTANDING the obsession with an idea, three sons had been raised who went their separate ways in the world. One went to East Africa in the colonial army, and from there he sent his wife and two small children home to escape the evils of the climate. The inability of these two groups to adjust themselves to each other under one roof occupies much of the book, and causes the young mother to send a plaintive appeal to her husband to come to her side. Unable to obtain leave, he deserts, and after many hardships is detected in France as the great war breaks out. Put into the army again, he redeserts and goes to his family. While trying to take them from the war zone in a wagon of corpses, his wife and son are killed by a shell.

The book is full of characters, some of them full length and some merely incisive little sketches. Unfortunately, it would seem, all of them are abnormal. None of the principal figures reacts in a way at all similar to what is generally considered usual. This young British author has set up a lot of people for which he seems to have no sympathy at all. He sneers at them as if he were not their own father. Is this merely clever writing to arouse the sympathy of the reader for these strange people? It accomplishes this at first, but soon even the reader loses respect for them because of their stupidity.

As a result of the eccentricities of the characters, the book can naturally not proceed on a very prosaic course. Events that would affect normal individuals in a given way, either affect the Severins entirely differently or not at all. The effect is one of great depression on the reader who can never know what to expect. Exasperation and frustration are felt at the self-pity of the characters and their total inability to deal with the most obvious situations. This is really an unfair advantage taken by the author, for he feels that there is no duty on his part to make the characters real and convincing and ones in which the reader can live as is done in the truly great figures of fiction.

* * * *

THESE peculiarities, combined with a fine facility of expression, enable Mr. Hutchinson to envelop the book with a terrible melancholy. He seems always able to convey the exact impression that he wants with great neatness, so it is only reasonable to suppose that he is trying to give his readers the creeps. Such situations as the wailings of a dying dog making each woman in the house distraught with the fear that it means her husband (who is away for some reason or another), is also dying, are depressing in the extreme.

The best thing in the book, and in its way really classic, is the development of the war as the inescapable force of greatest magnitude for each of the characters. It is only by main force that the reality of it breaks through to the dream world of this family, who wonders what the strange explosions are when shells are bursting in the streets. Danger must not be near, they believe, because the old colonel imagines that he is in touch with the war office who will put him in charge of operations at any minute. When the situation dawns on him, in a manner reminiscent of the last time that he faced the Prussians, he drives off in the only means of escape left, leaving his family to their own devices. Such diabolic touches as this are typical of the author's means of dealing with his characters, making the reader wonder if he finds any real sincerity and worth in human nature.

Such then is the book, expertly written about a group of abnormal characters in a tone of eeriest melancholy. The maddest escapades and most impossible persons are not made convincing for the author's trust in the influence of the printed word as he expressed them in these lines is just a little too great:

"You can't always believe what they tell you in the paper."

"No, but you always do."

Murder Will Out!!

Six Authors Get Together in the Name of Crime and Another One Sleuths Alone.

By Janice Tuchfeld.

"SIX AGAINST SCOTLAND YARD," by Margery Allingham, Anthony Berkeley, Freeman Wills Croft, Ronald Knox, Dorothy L. Sayers, Russell Thorndike. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.)

This is a new and novel idea in detective stories. Six of the more prominent detective novelists have undertaken to design a perfect crime, only to have former Commissioner Cornish, of Scotland Yard, proceed to show how an able detective could have found clues leading to a solution of the murderers and to their final conviction.

A difficulty is that the average reader will say the murderers have performed a public service, ridding the communities of the unwanted characters.

The stories are all ingenious and interesting and the dissections by Mr. Cornish are shrewd and clever. They offer varied interests in the different types of detective story presentation, an interest which is technical as well as esthetic in that the reader is in a position to contrast the different ways a detective story writer may build up his plot and how the problem can be solved while interest is sustained at the same time.

"DEAD MAN CONTROL," by Helen Reilly. (Doubleday, Doran, $2.)

Credited with several exciting murder novels, Helen Reilly is at her best in her latest mystery story, "Dead Man Control," which is packed full of suspense and intrigue.

This capable authoress carries you from the very first page to the regrettable last with interest and attention.

Instead of page after page of descriptive matter, each one is chockfull of conversation and arresting situations. Cleverly handled throughout and ingeniously planned, the climax brings the lovers together and the murderer safely in the hands of the law.

There is no doubt about it, Helen Reilly knows her readers. The murderer is well concealed, the innocent characters are all covered with guilt and the victim gets only what he deserves. The inspector is wary and resourceful, taking no time out for lunch, as is prevalent at critical moments in many detective novels. The conversation is scintillating and witty, the situations clever and gripping and the book as a whole offers an exciting evening's entertainment.

The History of Chinese Art

Chiang Yee Takes Subtle Dig at Occidental Civilization.

By Agnes E. Meyer.

When the Chinese art historians discuss the life and works of their great painters, they usually observe a sequence of praise that is wholly new and strange to the Western reader. They first dilate upon the artist's character, then speak of his reverence for the country's cultural traditions and only lastly do they consider the aesthetic contributions of the individual under discussion.

In the biographical section of the history of the Sung Dynasty we find Li Lung-mien, the greatest painter of that era, described in the following manner:

"He had a transcendingly distinguished mind and manners that were much admired by all the famous scholars of his day. Huang Shan-ku said of him that the poetical and gracious nature of his conduct and character was inferior to none of the ancients. However, he suffered greatly from his ability as a painter, since he is known to the world only for his art."

From this it would appear that the Chinese artist strove primarily to achieve a character that might approach in beauty and merit those of the great sages of the past; only secondarily he thought of his art and then largely as an instrument for the celebration of former minds and former events.

This attitude of humility is so taken for granted in Chinese manuscripts and such a contrast to the occidental artist's emphasis of self, that the Westerner can scarcely understand the mentality behind this impersonal conception, unless he has an opportunity to discover the sources from which it sprang and the currents which fed its growth. To compress thousands of years of Chinese history and philosophy within the compass of a single volume seems a well-nigh hopeless task and yet it has been very creditably accomplished by Chiang Yee, a native scholar who at present lectures on Chinese in the London School of Oriental Studies, in a recent publication which he calls "The Chinese Eye.' With the subtlety of his race Mr. Yee may well have published his interpretation of Chinese painting at this moment not only because he wished us to appreciate the wisdom of his great race but because the points that he makes in the analysis of his own civilization have a direct bearing on the serious problems which now challenge the occidental nations.

In his introductory chapters the author gives a skilful outline of China's political and philosophical history and reminds the reader that Chinese art is a reflection of the happy intermingling of Confucian and Taoist principles to which Buddhism began to make additional contributions during the first centuries of the Christian era.

During the Chou dynasty (1134-247 B. C.) Chinese civilization had already reached a high point of achievement as the magnificent ritual bronzes and jades of that period indicate, but the whole structure was weakened by such bitter and prolonged warfare that the two geniuses of the sixth century B. C., Confucius and Laotze realized—not unlike our own intellectual leaders—that all human progress depends upon the elimination of the ever recurrent danger of mutual destruction.

The philosophic Laotze, founder of Taoism, asserted that constantly augumenting material needs make conflict inevitable not only between nations, but between classes and individuals as well. And yet the resulting wars only decreased the wealth that can satisfy those material needs. His clear oriental intelligence revolted against this absurd impasse. Conflict will never cease, he declared, unless material wants are abated and inner spiritual needs encouraged to take their place.

With the proper spiritual development man could learn that heaven lay about him. The Taoists were individualists who shunned the world and often lived a hermit's life in order to attune themselves with the laws of nature. Not to save their own souls, as did the hermits of the west, but because the creative mind could only function at its best in silent communion with the natural environment. To this hermit tradition which existed as far back as their recorded history, the Chinese owe much of their greatest literature and art.

Confucius the practical statesman, unlike the Taoists, recognized the inevitability of conflict, but planned to reduce the tendency by emphasizing the mutual dependence of man and by giving an external form to society that expressed this interdependence. Each life, however humble, made a contribution to the whole, and since a blemish in any part reduces the perfection of the whole, individual conduct and character were the basis of society and the only barrier that can be found against the brute forces in man.

"Personal nobility, therefore," to quote the author of "The Chinese Eye," "should be the aim and object of all men; exerted on behalf of others in a limited sphere, it might gradually extend to the whole world."

The individual who seeks profit or glory is one who tries to take advantage of others. "Everything is already complete in myself" said a disciple of Confucius, meaning that gain and fame accrue naturally to deserving people; they depend finally upon character, not upon desire.

While the Greek world to our misfortune was inventing metaphysical barriers between man and his environment, the Chinese race evolved a system of behavior which was elaborated through active experimentation and made for productivity and happiness for more than 2,000 years.

The objective thinking of the Taoists and Confucians turned the attention out upon the world rather than inward upon the self. As a result the Chinese artist depicted the evolution of life, of which he felt himself to be a part, through landscapes and through figure paintings which have all the serenity of his own equilibrium. When a Tang or Sung scholar painted landscape, he was not making a pretty ornament, but he, like his predecessors, was recording the ancient belief of the Chinese in the profound significance of nature in every manifestation. When he depicted human events, he was celebrating the history of his race, the great deeds of virtuous men of the past, or illustrating the Confucian precepts which were the basis of society and of individual behavior.

If early Chinese art shows us humanity and natural beauty in its most poised, its most distinguished aspect, that is because these paintings were made by a people whose conception of man's role in the universe has never been equalled either in its simplicity or its assurance; it had dignity that was devoid of arrogance, humility that never became servile, and a beautiful calm which is possible only for those who are untroubled by the thought of destiny. The orderly arrangement of their compositions mirrored the orderly arrangement of their daily lives. The even tenor of their way was translated into the no less even tenor of their line.

This close interrelationship of philosopsy, literature and painting is described by Chiang Yee, not in the rapid outlines with which I am trying to lure the public into reading his book but with ample illustration from art and literature and with that fascinating circumlocution which is characteristic of the Chinese mind. An Oriental never approaches his idea in a straight line lest it escape before he can capture it, but stalks it like shy game in wide detours until it is apprehended almost unawares.

With oriental graciousness Chiang Yee also avoids direct criticism of our civilization, but implicit in some of his positive statements about his own people are many sharp thrusts for all western readers who are sensitive enough to feel them. "Confucianism is a positive philosophy. The depiction of evil deeds, of the mean in human nature—these are unknown in the history of our art." In these few words are concealed whole volumes of contempt for our frustrated, negative attitude toward life which now makes our art so pathetically weak and ineffective.

It was not a happy accident but through greater insight, tenacity and sheer courage that the Chinese race, under the most trying circumstances, has preserved a positive attitude toward life and refused scornfully to record the unworthy aspects of human affairs. Unlike our own puling era, they were unwilling to emphasize the sinister, the degrading, the negative. Not that they were any the less aware of the tragedy and pathos of existence; on the contrary, their literary geniuses of prose or verse have written some of the most profound analyses of the inhumanity of man to man, but, like the Greeks, they saw these struggles between good and evil on such a grand scale that the mind comes away from the contemplation of their poems and essays with a healing sense of the greatness of all destiny. The nasty outpourings of the petty side of the social struggle in which we revel nowadays would have been repellent to the taste of the Chinese artist and to his high conception of the function of art.

It has been said in extenuation of our miserable age that we have a greater awareness of social injustice than previous generations and that this leads us to cry aloud over situations that left our ancestors indifferent. But the test of the power and sincerity of inspiration is, after all, the form which it is able to achieve. Our amorphous literature and painting proves conclusively that the Chinese were right in their assumption that only a deep, positive belief of some kind can produce great works of art.

Never has there been a moment in our history when we had more to learn from the ancient wisdom of the Orient. The extent to which their powerful tradition still lives as a potent influence among the Chinese scholars of today may be gathered from this little volume in the English language written by a scholar who would have found himself at home with the Seven Wise Men of the Bamboo Grove (third century), or with the sages of the White Lotos Club (fourth century). The tree of such a culture, as Chiang Yee says, is expansive, with roots that bestride mountains and streams, while its crest pierces the clouds. "Withal it is an ancient tree, and in spite of the storms that have beat upon it for centuries, its fruit has almost the same taste upon our lips."

The latter part of next month Alfred A. Knopf is publishing "The Invaders" by a new writer named Stuart David Engstrand . . . It is really first-hand stuff as the author worked through 1935 as a sharecropper . . . He quit because the end of that year showed him a profit of only $2.80 . . . But that's not the sad part . . . The sad part is that he took up writing books in order to make more money . . . There's a place for everything and this seems to be the place to say "out of the frying pan into the fire" . . .

On December 4, exactly 302 years ago, John Milton wrote to a friend: "Farewell, and expect me on Monday (if God will) in London among the booksellers" . . . They knew how to live in the good old days . . . Instead of waiting on a cold street corner, or a crowded theater lobby, friends waited for each other in book shops . . . Even better than that is to meet at your dentist's office . . . Then, while waiting, you can finish all those continued stories you've started there . . .

Many Washingtonians will be interested in a little booklet which Mrs. Isabel Linkens Gates has brought out of her mother's letters . . It is impossible to believe that these cheery little notes were written by a lady who had attained 80 years . . . One of them I particularly like . . . it has a Katherine Mansfieldian flavor . . . "The sun is playing hide-and-seek with a fog bank. We had a nice little earthquake yesterday. Not severe enough to make one panicky, but to give one that so-small feeling. I am not afraid" . . . "Just Thoughts" like these make up the little book and give it its title . . .

Houghton Mifflin is bringing out a book in January by Ian Hay . . . It is called "Housemaster" . . . Scorning the thinly worn "colossal" and "stupendous," the publishers are nevertheless not above proclaiming it "a sturdier Mr. Chips" . . . Sort of an old block off the chips . . . If James Hilton follows Mazo de la Roche's example, he will sooner or later write a book entitled "Master Chips" . . .

"I wish I had someone else to draw me," Georges Schreiber replied when asked for his own self-portrait . . . "I have to look in a mirror and see myself in reverse. My pencil works in reverse and so my picture is being drawn by myself in reverse" . . . And I've been thinking all this time he saw two of himself every time he looked in a glass . . . Else why the pluralizing of his first name?

Lillian Hellman's new play, "Days to Come," will shortly be brought out of Knopf . . . Which reminds me that it is about time to take down the old calendar and put up the new . . . I am torn between the one picturing a train which looks like a cross bettwen a Chinese New Year and a hangover . . . And the other calendar which has six puppies scrambling out of an overturned basket . . . Oh, for the good old days when every calendar had a lady . . . And every lady had a muff . . . And every muff had a bunch of violets pinned coyly to its ermine tails . . .

I've had two notes this week from Isabel Paterson . . . Both of them on 3x5 cards . . . Whoever would have thought that the New York Herald Tribune's "book-worm" would have turned out to be an inching worm? . . . If you don't like the books you got Christmas any better than you like the ties and funny pickle dishes, turn to Isabel's "Never Ask the End" and re-read it . . . Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back on this suggestion . . .

Don'ts for Authors' Wives

"There died early this month in England," says the Kansas City Star, "a pleasant little widow, 66 years old, whose life work had been making a genius comfortable. She was Mrs. Joseph Conrad, whose novelist husband died in 1924."

This newspaper article also lists six of Mrs. Conrad's golden rules for a happy marriage as follows:

Don't fail to give your husband the proper environment in which to work.

Don't disturb any of his papers.

Don't clean or dust his room, except when he is not working.

Don't ever fail to be tactful and devoted.

Don't mind having your presence taken for granted.

'Beck of a Baleful Star'

By Agnes De Lano.

"GYPSY FIDDLER" comes from the pen of "Petulengro," a gypsy musician, announced by his publishers as a descendent of George Borrow's famous gypsy. They also go on to say that George Borrow would have taken delight in this autobiography, a claim that gives us pause. There is no doubt that this book will make refreshing reading for jaded folk eager to read of a life molded to new and different patterns, but it was never the jaded reader who savored with peculiar delight the works of "rare George Borrow." With what an easy and natural flow of expression did "Romany Rye" and "The Bible in Spain" come from the pen of that inspired gypsy! It is small wonder that his reading public comprised a limited group of discerning people whose taste for literature was quite as strong as their taste for adventure. This will not be the case, I venture to say, with the readers of "Petulengro."

This is not to speak disparagingly of "Gypsy Fiddler," but rather to qualify it as a merely refreshing and spontaneous autobiography that makes no pretense toward literary acclaim. Its frankness and sincerity are engaging, and one wonders anew at each page that one man's life could be so full of the spice of variety. There are chapters devoted to the free and easy life of the errant musician at the country fairs, to the carefree existence of the van and the road, and to the more sophisticated realm of night club and cafe life. The gypsy blood of Petulengro never lets him stay long in one place, and he roams the earth—not so much in search of adventure, as in deference to a restless spirit.

HE goes at first not so far afield—indeed, it is only to the Isle of Wight, where he joins a cracked symphony orchestra and falls passionately in love with one of the Shanklin maidens. Later on, he takes passage for Australia, and one of the most sordid sections of the book describes his return as a member of the crew on a tramp steamer, on which the life was translatable in terms of disease, degradation and filth. There is another flight to South America, with jungle backgrounds relieving the monotony of the work-a-day world.

At one period "Petulengro" emigrated to New York, and he describes Broadway with such gloom and with so thinly disguised a hatred, that the American reader can "lay no flattering unction to his soul." Africa, too, with its diamond fields, at one time became the object of his roving nature's quest.

Perhaps the most interesting parts of the book are the ingenuous pages that tell of his learning to read and write long after he was a grown man. He invests that adventure with all the thrill that is too seldom realized by those of us who take literacy for granted. The pictures of his father that he flashes across the screen of his reminiscence have a certain frank charm. He says of "the old man" that "he is still alive" and that "although he is a good 90, his figure is as slim as a youngster's. . . . He has forsaken the van for good and lives in a large house, furnished rather expensively and in excellent taste, and in a highly respectable London suburb. But, by preference, he talks the jargon of the road and eats off a newspaper in the kitchen when he really wants to enjoy a meal. An evening spent in his house is unique. He might well forget his manners and use his fingers for a fork, or dip his bread in vinegar. He might be discussing some tinker rogue of the old time in the language of the hedgerows, or he might be talking about Lessing or psychoanalysis, or Neo-Post Impressionism, with knowledge and no errors in syntax."

* * * *

HE writes very amusingly of an occasion when he and his little sister in their childhood were asked to play gypsy music at one of Lady Hobart-Hampden's functions. After disturbing the even tenor of the serene household by stealing tidbits from the trays that were being carried to the dining room by the servants, they were called in to entertain the guests. At once the little sister took a dislike to Lady Hobart-Hampden's husband who was Viceroy to India, and refused to play for him.

"'Oh dear,' said the Viceroy, assuming an expression of pitiful disappointment.

"'But you're not going to play for him altogether,' said one of the guests. 'You're going to play for all of us.'

"'I'm not sure about that,' the viola of our trio retorted. 'There's a lot of you I don't want to play for.'

"There was a roar of laughter, then the Viceroy said: 'Suppose you tell us whom—besides myself—you disapprove of, and we'll make our selves scarce.'

"'All right,' our viola agreed, unperturbed. 'Well, there's you for a start.'

"'If I hid myself under the table would that do?,' His Excellency suggested diffidently. And thereupon the Viceroy of India to the accompaniment of loud cheers from his guests, ducked down and crawled under the table with as great savoir faire as if he were accustomed to perform the operation every day as a part of his official duties. Then my sister went among the other ladies and gentlemen indicating with the aid of a merciless forefinger which of them had fallen under the ban of her displeasure."

The book is full of anecdotes with a good deal of human interest. Touching elbows with vagabond and kings, with tinkers and tradesfolk, with pedagogues and "pretty ladies," Petulengro goes through life unhampered by the bonds that tie most of us, but perhaps the "corrupted currents of keeping unpolluted the springs of this world" have prevented his inspiration which made George Borrow decidedly a bird of another feather. "Gypsy Fiddler" is interesting—exciting even—but it will never hold its own on a shelf of minor literary rareties.

"GYPSY FIDDLER," by Petulengro. (Funk, Wagnalls.)

"Caviar to the General"

Arthur Guiterman Parodies Gently and Joseph Maxwell Finishes Sappho's Lines.

"GAILY THE TROUBADOUR," by Arthur Guiterman. (Dutton, $2.)

Once in a blue moon a parody lifts itself lightly to the level of the poem parodied. So rare is this quality of soaring lightness that when it does manifest itself one remarks it with a peculiar delight. In "Gaily the Troubadour," Arthur Guiterman turns the trick successfully several times.

The whole volume is pervaded by a satirical spirit that never once loses its gentleness of breeding, and it is, perhaps, the quiet and unobtrusive gallantry of the verses that distinguishes them so clearly from the more blatant variety of fun-poking stanzas, dashed off for our weekly delectation by the satirists of the New Yorker's school. With apologies to Ogden Nash and writers of his ilk, one is tempted to say,

"But I find Guiterman
A so much sweeter man."

These verses never strut nor stare about, but from a quiet corner of the poet's mind (a mind well stored with history, literature, and above all, a warm love of humanity), they peek out shyly and let fall slyly upon the listening air, their low-voiced quips and cranks.

As to "manner" and "matter," the poet's skill in handling verse-forms and in giving them subtle and infinite variety, may be "caviar to the general." These fragments, for the sheer melody of their measures, will be enjoyed by the little coterie that takes delight in Austin Dobson and Walter Savage Landor, in Locker-Lampson and Gilbert and Sullivan. Metrically speaking, Arthur Guiterman is a gentleman of the old school.

But the countless familiar and everyday subjects that come in for a gentle grilling, will give a wide reading public a chance for a little grateful applause. For who is above being pleased to have the Theater Guild twitted for its un-American plays, and who doesn't secretly revel when Eugene O'Neil, who "moans a great, great deal" and who is "tart as lemon peel" and "sad as cold boiled veal," as well as "slightly off his keel, with somber Freudian zeal," is saluted at the end with "three ouches and a squeal?" There is a charming poem entitled "Mythology" which should go a long way toward making the dullest student in high school realize that "things were pretty lively in the golden isles of Greece."

The happy thing about this little volume is the evident delight that Arthur Guiterman took in writing it. It reflects his domestic tastes, his literary tastes, his gift for friendship, and his love of nature, and it leaves one with a companionable and not too sober sense of this world's blessings.

AGNES DE LANO.

"COMPLETED FRAGMENTS," by Joseph R. N. Maxwell. (Manthorne & Burack, Inc., Boston, $1.50.)

Shoddiness may at times be tolerated—though sometimes in this respect toleration is no virtue—but it ought never to be praised. When shoddy art issues from the hand of an eminent person, such as Mr. Maxwell, who is a dean of Boston College and a member of the Society of Jesus, one can feel only regret. His book of poetry, "Completed Fragments," is a series of short lyric poems, in praise of the nobler virtues and of a woman's love for a man. Each poem is "an attempt to spin out to full length" a particular line or half-line from Sappho.

Art siphons its life-giving juices from the soil of contemporary events, people, situations. When a poet pulls up the plant and lets its roots dangle in the air—such as the air of another age and civilization—its leaves curl up, the petals grow lax, its color fades and its surface grows harsh or weak to the touch.

His 38 odd poems are in the most conventional meters, with the most flabby vocabulary—each word recedes into a weak double chin—and a certain appeal to the verities which hides his contact with life. As for his reconstruction of the Sapphic world, he had the advantage of starting with a most profound classical scholarship augmented by years of teaching in that field at Holy Cross College. Unfortunately, learning and pedagogy will not make up for the want of poetic ability.

Characteristic is the following stanza from a poem which is preceded by a line quoted from "Sappho":

"I will have neither honey nor bees."
"What was your spring? Did the violets grow
Under the lilied gold-splashed snow?
Did not the vervaine, anemones
Bloom honeyed blossoms for the bees?"

Of course, this nerveless verse only adds to his effrontery in trying to reconstruct and better a poet, which men hitherto have found fairly pleasing.

Record Crowds Are Expected In Night Spots

Clubs and Hotels Prepare Gay Celebrations for New Year's Eve.

By Chanticleer.

Reservations are pouring into the night spots and it looks as though tomorrow night will top the old-time New Year's Eve celebrations by a safe margin. Special acts are being booked at most of the hotels and night clubs and the music in town is the best it has been in years. There's still time to reserve a table if you act promptly.

One of the newest spots for New Year's Eve merrymaking is the Wardman Park's new supper-dance club opened Christmas night. Photo-murals adorn the walls of the cocktail lounge, which is separated from the bar by a partition effect. A picture of the Capitol building 18 feet long gives this room the name of "Capitol Lounge."

Also are huge photographs of the Supreme Court Building, Mount Vernon, Lincoln Memorial, Washington Monument, Red Cross Building and the Folger Memorial Library. Prevailing colors are blue and rust red. A map of the United States is inlaid in the linoleum flooring.

• • • •

"El Patio" of the Carlton is planning a grand party for revelers, and started in the right direction by engaging the talents of Marissa Flores, the California senorita who is beginning her Eastern tour in Washington. She is known in southern California as one Spanish dancer competent to interpret Spanish dances in this country. Sande Williams and his orchestra for the dancing.

The Lotus uses superlatives in describing the week's billing—most colorful, most daring, largest! Its the "Flower Parade of 1937," with a line of dancing girls and principals galore: Theodore and Denesha, adagio team; Garcia Gomez, Mexican dancer; Evelyn Knight, songstress; the Barclays, comedy numbers; Victor Hyde, the "one-man band," who plays three trumpets at one time. New Year's Eve shows at 11:30 and 1:30.

La Paree's plan this year is to out-celebrate all previous New Year's Eves. The Music Box Revue is the result—with Broadway stars guaranteed to do more than just twinkle, and with Al Sakol and his orchestra for dancing. Heading the revue are Lancaster and Lolita, lovely Hazel Warren, swing singer, and a fiery gypsy dancer a bit on the mysterious side, because she is known only as Lilli.

No reservations needed this year at the Mayfair. And no minimum or cover charge. Jimmy Byrd says: "Just come New Year's Eve and do as you please and stay as long as you like."

• • • •

It's a "prosperity party" at the Willard, with Johnny Slaughter and his orchestra back on deck after all these long months, and a special floor show direct from Broadway. Tariff covers supper and breakfast with favors.

At the Russian Troika: Mischa Markoff, master of ceremonies and guitar-playing basso; Capt. Nick Hope and his 'round-the-world accordion cruise; Orlik and Lolik in their famous sailor dance, and the ensemble, headed now by Zinaida Nicolina, continental favorite, who came to Washington to open the Troika several years back. And then there's Simeon Saxonsky, violinist, and Marusia Sava, gypsy contralto, and Yascha Nicoroggossoff, the fiery dagger dancer.

• • • •

At Cocoanut Grove: Noisemakers, favors, souvenirs, dinner, dancing and entertainment, headed by Paul Tremaine and his orchestra; Rene Villon, Lee and Coty O'Neill, Carl Addison, Helen Vernon, Kitty Simon, Jimmy Hawkes, Jerson Kaufman and a wow of a Broadway chorus.

At Brinkley's: Dinner, dancing and entertainment, with music by Johnny Rice and his syncopators.

At Maryland Club Gardens: Don and Dolores promise a real snake dance for Thursday night. They insist a snake will be borrowed from the Zoo for the big occasion. The snake in the act almost gets Dolores, but Don saves her. Charley Jeter and his orchestra for your dancing.

• • • •

At the Madrillon: Johnny Shaw and his Versatile Sextet is being backed up by a bang-up floor show from Broadway—dancers, singers, acrobatics and the works in general. Noisemakers, confetti, etc.

At the Dude Ranch: Casa Brande offers an extra special for Thursday night—Betty and Buddy Harmond, roller skating whizzes from Castle Farm (biggest of the country's nighteries). Berk Motley and the band for dancing.

At the Pall Mall Room: The Raleigh reminds you that New Year's Eve might as well be the night you see Loper and Hayes, because they're leaving soon for four fast engagements on the way to Hollywood for camera work. Eddie Elkins and his orchestra for your dancing.

• • • •

At the Shoreham: First, they say, on the New Year's resolutions of many a Washingtonian is making arrangements for the next eve at this rendezvous. Barnee directs the orchestra and Maxim Lowe is in charge of the largest revue ever to be presented on the ballroom floor. Plus a dozen dnacing "Windsorettes."

At the Ambassador: Public address systems will carry the music of the two orchestras here over rooms adjoining the Hi-Hat and Ambassador Rooms. No cover, no minimum. Music by Silver String Revelers and the Royal Hawaiians.

• • • •

Gay Nineties: They're planning to take the roof off here with an old-fashioned celebration. Dorothy Tavor and her assistants will see that everyone has a swell time.

Show Boat: Two orchestras, one for each of the two floors of this Baltimore road spot. Dancing until 4 o'clock.

Mrs. Simpson's Kin Testify in D. C. Case

Mrs. Charles P. Hill and her daughter, Frances, of 1828 Wyoming avenue northwest, cousins of Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, appeared in Police Court yesterday as prosecuting witnesses against a colored man accused of rifling their home.

The man, Horace Stevens, 28, of 49 Hanover street northwest, pleaded not guilty to two charges of grand larceny, demanded a jury trial and was held under $500 bond on each charge when araigned before Judge John P. McMahon.

Mrs. Hill testified Stevens came to their home several days ago asking for work. She said she formerly had employed the man and allowed him to do some work around the place.

After he had gone, she told the court, a quantity of valuable perfume, clothing and jewelry was missing. The loot amounted to $175.

Professors Attack Oath of Allegiance

Richmond, Va., Dec. 29 (AP).—The American Association of University Professors today declared State laws requiring teachers to take an oath of allegiance to the Constitution were "futile" and went on record as opposing such requirements.

Local chapters were urged to seek the repeal of measures in 22 States already requiring loyalty oaths. The resolution, which carried unanimously, said, in part:

"These laws can easily be used as an instrument to promote intolerance, restrict our civil liberties and the freedom of teaching, and to accentuate propaganda against democratic ideals."

TWA President Names Van Slyck as Assistant

Appointment of Milton Van Slyck as assistant to the president of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., was announced yesterday by Jack Frye, president.

For ten months Van Slyck has been public relations manager of the TWA central region with headquarters in Chicago. After January 1, he will be located in the National Press Building here.

Stores Will Be Open Day After New Year's

The department store managers have agreed to close New Year's Day, but to remain open as usual on Saturday, Edward D. Shaw, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, announced yesterday.

The group also decided to close inauguration day, January 20.

Mule-Eating Mosquito Killed, And Woman Wins Liars' Title

Michigan Housewife Asserts Old Maude Let Go With Both Heels and Broke the Gargantuan's Neck; Takes Championship Easily.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—A gargantuan mosquito that snapped up a mule was villain of the prevarication that won the medal and title of the world's champion liar of 1936 for Mrs. Gale Barnhouse, of Fowlerville, Mich.

O. C. Hulett, president of the Burlington (Wis.) Liars Club, which arranges the annual contest, announced the award tonight.

Mrs. Barnhouse's lie emerged as winner from among more than 5,000 submitted during the year.

Her story concerned the biggest mosquito in Michigan, where she said they had the "biggest mosquitoes in the world." She told how its diet started with baby chicks, but advanced to grown ducks, turkeys, calves and even a couple of milk cows.

"But now it's dead," Mrs. Barnhouse related. "Last week it swooped down, opened its mouth and snapped up our old mule. When I saw that mosquito's mouth close, I thought to myself, 'There goes a darned good mule.' But old Maude lashed out with both hind feet before the mosquito could swallow, and broke its neck!"

Roman Links, of San Francisco, wound up in second place with a story of capitalizing on fog in his city.

The fog got so thick, he wrote, that he "sprayed it with black ink, and then chopped it up and sold it around the neighborhood for coal."

Curley Keeps Silent On Rumors of Wedding

Boston, Dec. 29 (U.P.).—Gov. James M. Curley tonight had "nothing to say" about recurrent reports that he would marry Mrs. Gertrude Casey Dennis, Brookline widow and mother of two children, early in 1937.

Mrs. Dennis, an attractive brunette, and the 62-year-old Governor have been seen together frequently at public functions and rumors of their engagement have long been current. An accomplished pianist, Mrs. Dennis is about 45. Her husband died several years ago. Curley's wife died in 1929.

Crossing Work Here Is Assured Enough Money

Bureau of Roads Sends D. C. Board Notice of New Grant of $250,000.

The District's grade crossing elimination program was assured of completion yesterday when the Bureau of Public Roads notified the Commissioners of an additional $250,000 grant to remove the last of Washington's major railroad hazards.

Although the Commissioners have not definitely decided how the funds will be used, Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, highway director, said tentative plans call for a viaduct over the Bates road crossing of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad tracks near Tenth and Varnum streets northeast and widening of the viaduct over Bladensburg road northeast.

The Public Roads Bureau has previously allotted $410,000 for grade-crossing elimination in the District. Various projects begun with this money are rapidly nearing completion, Capt. Whitehurst said. Among them is an underpass at the Eastern avenue crossing and a viaduct on Michigan avenue northeast. District funds are being used to supplement the Federal grant at the latter project.

Under present plans, Capt. Whitehurst said, widening work at the Bladensburg road viaduct probably will be undertaken first. Now considered a traffic safety hazard, the viaduct will be increased in width from 40 to 60 feet.

The new grant contemplates a two-year program, Capt. Whitehurst declared, and the Bates road project cannot start until land has been condemned.

France Seizes 2 Aliens; Espionage Ring Hinted

Paris, Dec. 29 (AP).—French authorities disclosed today two additional foreigners have been arrested on suspicion of complicity in an alleged espionage ring. Michael Rosenfeld, a Lithuanian, and Mlle. Suzanne Linder, a secretary at the ministry of foreign affairs, already had been detained during the investigation.

Questioning by officials showed Rosenfeld and Mlle. Linder were in communication with Samuel Fradkin, another Lithuanian. The police summoned Fradkin and held him on a charge of carrying a false passport. Fradkin declared he obtained his passport from a friend, Paul Schapiro, a Russian. Schapiro later was held for complicity in the false passport charge.

Her Party Too Big, Mrs. McLean to Add Rooms for Dancers

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean believes that if the party you've planned is too extensive for your residence, the remedy is simply to enlarge your house.

So the wealthy hostess has ordered the great front porch of her estate, Friendship, converted into two huge ballrooms for her New Year's ball, renewing her custom for lavish holiday entertainment in honor of the approaching birthday of her 20-year-old son, Jock.

Carpenters have been called in, and soon the temporary structure, which will be torn down after the affair, will be complete. A nationally known orchestra will play in each of the ballrooms.

Asked if she would wear the celebrated $2,000,000 Hope diamond, Mrs. McLean replied:

"I always do."

Blind Musician Is Killed By N. Y. Subway Train

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Oscar England, 34-year-old blind musician, miscounted his steps in a Union Square subway station, in which he had made his way successfully innumerable times, and was killed by an express train today.

James Sumners, 34, co-member with England of a trio of blind musicians who recently advanced from street minstrelry to a radio program, was with England. He said England had gone onto the uptown platform instead of the downtown side, bringing him closer to the platform edge than the distance to which he was accustomed. He took one step too many and plunged off the platform.

Masons at Manassas To Install Officers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Manassas, Dec. 29.—Howard Luck, of Manassas, will be installed Friday as worshipful master of Manassas Lodge, A. F. & A. M. Other officers who will be installed are George B. Cocke, senior warden; William Hill Brown, jr., junior warden; G. Raymond Ratcliffe, treasurer; John T. Broaddus, secretary; Oden Breenen, senior deacon; C. A. Sinclair, jr., junior deacon; the Rev. A. Stuart Gibson, chaplain; G. G. Allen and A. MacMillan, stewards; T. M. Reaves, tiler.

Roosevelt Gives Son Job as Aide

James Roosevelt, son of the President, is coming to Washington in the capacity of "odd jobs" man for President Roosevelt at the White House.

Asked whether his son was to become one of his secretaries, the President said he was going to do a lot of odd jobs for him but that no consideration had been given to the question of giving his job a title.

James accompanied his father on his recent South American tour and it has long been reported that he might join the White House secretariat.

Mexico to Seek U. S. Loan.

Garnett Orders 'Claw' Devices Out by Friday

Operators Using Machines After Midnight Tomorrow Face Arrest.

United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett yesterday issued an ultimatum to operators of "claw" machines, giving them until midnight tomorrow, to get them away from public use or face arrest for violating the District's antigambling statutes.

In accordance with the edict, Col. Garnett advised Maj. Ernest W. Brown, chief of police, asking him to have his men seize machines found in operation after that hour. It is expected the operators will cooperate with police and will discontinue their use pending an appeal, which is being planned.

The machines were held to be games of chance rather than games of skill in a ruling by Justice Jesse C. Adkins two days ago. The decision took from the consideration of a jury the question of just what the contrivances were.

Justice Adkins issued his decision after a two-week trial, in which exponents of the various styles of play used on the machines gave their versions of what happened through the application of skill and what happened when luck became the major factor.

Col. Garnett also yesterday obtained from Julian I. Richards, attorney, representing the operators of 18 "rotary merchandizers," a promise to withdraw the machines from public use.

The machines, only recently used here, are box-like arrangements containing a wheel on which there is merchandise. The player starts the wheel and then tries to stop it where the prize he seeks is close to the hopper. A mechanical arm is then used to attempt to push the prize from the then-stationary wheel into the hopper, whence, if successful, the player extracts it.

Lost and Found

By Priscilla Wayne

CHAPTER 32.

At the door of the jail was a long, low, very aristocratic chummy roadster.

Patrick got into the rumble seat of the roadster as though he had ridden there many times before.

"Are we going back to Grandpa Merritt's?" Doris asked as George slid into the seat beside her and touched the starter.

"Not now," George told her.

Then he did a queer thing. Not minding that Min and several of her progeny stood on the steps of the jail watching him, he turned and took Doris in his arms. "Do you know, darling," he queried tenderly, "do you know that I love you very much?"

"I hoped you did, George," Doris whispered, her head on his shoulder.

"And that means that you love me," George told her excitedly. "And it's a good thing you do, Mrs. Grayson—we belong to each other. We're legally married."

"It seems like a dream, George," Doris whispered.

"A sweet dream and I don't want to wake up—ever, Doris."

"But there are some things I want to tell you, George—"

"Not right now," George said, starting the car. "The explanations we have to make can wait until a better time and a better setting. In the meantime, we're going places, Mrs. Grayson, I give you three guesses, where."

"Back where we first met each other—?"

"Well, a touch farther back," George laughed gayly. "Teck and Chicquita know that we're coming. They know I'm bringing my wife back."

Doris snuggled close as the big car took to the road like a purring, satisfied kitten.

If she lived to be an old, old woman Doris knew she would never forget that ride. The sun riding high in the heavens, Patrick sound asleep in the back seat of the car, the great engine purring perfectly in front of them and the man who was everything in the world to her, at her side.

"I saw Grandpa and Grandma Merritt," George told her. "I brought them some things I knew they'd like. They were the ones who told me where I should find you. I told them I'd bring you back to them for a little visit after our glorious three days are over."

"Three days—and after that we won't be together. The days won't be glorious any more?" Doris faltered.

George's own voice broke with emotion. "Yes, they will be glorious, Doris. All the days of our lives will be glorious. I'm going back to the work I love—back to work I ran away from when it seemed I hadn't anything left to live for."

He stopped the car suddenly. Took her into his eager arms. "And now I have the world to live for, Doris—oh, Doris, isn't it wonderful the difference a little armful of a girl like you can make in a man's life?"

After a while—many kisses later—they drove on.

It was joy, then, to see Teck and Chicquita waiting for them in the doorway of the great house on the mountain.

It was joy, too, just a little later to be sitting on the big davenport in front of the fireplace while the logs burned down to delightful embers, Patrick happily asleep on the rug before them.

"I've got a lot to tell you, George," Doris said, presently.

George caught her little hands in his and stayed their anxious fluttering. "But I've got some confessions to make, Doris. I'm ashamed, dear, so ashamed that it will take half my life to make it up to you, but the first time I saw you in this room I honestly believed you were—well, a—a gun moll!"

"A what?" Doris' voice carried the astonishment she felt. "A what?"

"There was a radio broadcast that night from the police. The police were searching for a girl named Polly Donnelly who answered your description—she had taken part in a bank robbery and a kidnaping—a slim little girl with big eyes who wore a gray squirrel coat and drove a big roadster——"

"Why, I didn't know. I didn't know that, George," Doris puzzled. "Why, if you had——"

"I tried to tell you—that night," George confessed. "I believed you might be the girl, and yet—well, you see, I was falling in love with you even then and I was trying to get you away where you'd be safe——"

Now Doris was understanding something she had not understood before. "George, did the sheriff think I was that same girl, too?"

"Yes, he did, Doris. In fact, the entire country was looking for me, as well as for her. Officers had found Polly's car near my cabin. They deduced it was she and I in Teck's car—you see, we can't blame him for that. His suspicions were strong enough. And he had a legal ground to detain you."

"Why did he let me go, then?" Doris puzzled quickly.

"I know. I'm getting all mixed up with my story. But the reason he let you go without a word was that he'd got a telegram from Albuquerque. The real girl criminal—the real girl with the gray jacket—I mean the one that actually did the killing—well, she was arrested the day you were and she confessed everything."

And now Doris was sitting up excitedly, "George, is she the girl I traded cars with? Is she?"

"I guess she must have been. But I don't understand that. I don't understand how you happened to have that girl's car—I can't understand it——"

"George, it's simple enough, perfectly simple."

"Tell me then, darling—but George's kisses made the telling slower.

"I met her in Albuquerque—in a hotel. In the women's room. And she was crying. She asked me if I had a car. I told her that I did have. That it was just outside the door."

"Your car? Great scott, honey, you wouldn't give your car to a total stranger, would you?"

"No, of course not, George, but now listen. The girl told me she was in trouble."

"Trouble? I'll say she was."

"Oh, but, George, she didn't explain that she was a criminal—that she——"

"What did she say, sweetheart? I'm just trying to help you."

"Why she said that she was running away—to marry the man she loved. And her parents were after her. Her father hated the young man, she said, and she begged me to trade cars with her. Hers was the same kind of a car as mine, see? We found that out."

"Sounds like a jigsaw puzzle to me."

"Well, I guess it does to me," Doris admitted. "Anyway, I felt sorry for the girl. She loved this man so much—at least, she said she did. And I was having trouble with my Dad, too. I could sympathize. So I agreed to drive her car. We traded coats so that she could just walk down to my car."

"And that's how you happened to be wearing her coat?"

"Why, yes, don't you see? I'd quarreled with my Dad and she'd quarreled with hers. We were both in the same boat. I thought we could help each other, George, I was—I was running away, too."

"From your father?"

"Yes. I thought I'd been abused. Oh, I must have been a young demon, George—an idiot!"

The man held the girl very close. "But you're a young angel now."

"I quarreled with Dad over my allowance. I had ordered a new car. A beauty. And he said I couldn't have it. I know now that I was a selfish little beast. But then I thought I was bitterly abused. I told Dad I'd leave home and never come back—that I hated all the home folks—and that I was disgraced before my friends because he countermanded the order for the car. Oh, it seems such a 'tempest in a teapot' now."

"And Dad declared I'd stay home and obey him or he would have the police hunt me down like a common——" Doris' voice broke.

"Would it help, Doris, to know that your father is just as sorry for what happened as you are? Or to know that he and your mother are——"

"But George! How can you know? My father is in Buffalo."

"Not now. He was when I telephoned him two days ago—after I had read a newspaper story of your disappearance and of the search he was making everywhere for you.

"It was my learning you were really you that made it possible for me to go back to the rancho openly. First I went to the sheriff we met on the mountain and told him all I knew—but I couldn't explain how you happened to be driving the Donnelly girl's car even then.

"At first he demanded I take him to you, but then he got word that the real Polly Donnelly had been arrested and he believed my story.

"I went on to the rancho yesterday, never dreaming you might be needing me, and last night drove most of the way back. Grandpa and Grandma Merritt weren't awake when I got to their place this morning only to learn that you had been arrested.

"Your father and mother are on their way here right now. They'll be here in three days. That's what I meant when I said we should have three days together."

Doris was sobbing softly in his arms.

"They love you very much Doris. You want to see them, don't you?"

"Loving you," Doris answered as her sobs lessened, " makes me realize how very much I really love them."

100,000 Get Pay Boost.

San Juan, Porto Rico, Dec. 29 (AP). Wage increases totaling $2,000,000 for the season beginning January 1 were announced today by Porto Rican sugar employers in an agreement with 100,000 laborers guaranteeing collective bargaining and an eight-hour day.

Police Arrest 5 In Numbers Raid

Breaking into an attic room at 1305 Rhode Island avenue northwest, a police vice squad yesterday smashed a huge "numbers" headquarters and arrested five men on charges of operating a lottery.

Armed with a Police Court warrent, the raiders, led by Sergt. George C. Deyoe, entered the rooming house about 3:30 p. m. The five men there at the time gave their names as Hyman Sussman, 26, of the 3900 block Thirteenth street northwest; Jack Freidlander, 31, of the 4800 block New Hampshire avenue northwest; Fred Schwartz, 23, of the Thirteenth street address; Raymond Gossage, 26, of the 1400 block of street northwest, and Edward Holober, 27, of the 3100 block Eighteenth street northwest.

Deyoe said two of the men were operating adding machines when his men entered. More than 10,000 alleged "numbers" slips were confiscated, which led police to believe the daily "take" to be several thousands of dollars.

Athletes Subject Of Hygiene Talk

Are coaches and team physicians more interested in keeping their athletes in "good repair" for the season than in teaching them habits of hygiene and good health?

This question was raised yesterday by Dr. Thomas A. Story, of Stanford University, at the Second National Conference on College Hygiene at the Wardman Park Hotel.

Students of all ages, he pointed out, are told that the drinking cup is unhealthy, yet on Saturday afternoons crowds watch football players on college gridirons drinking out of commn water buckets.

On the Air Today

WOL presents tonight the second half of the celebration of the Mutual network's graduation to the coast-to-coast class. Inasmuch as it is the addition of the Don Lee network on the West Coast that makes Mutual's big-time network possible it seems appropriate that much of the program should come from California.

Jackie Cooper, Betty Grable, Mary Brian, Preston Foster and Anne Shirley will do honors for the film colony in the first part of the celebration at 10. Conrad Nagel, one-time star of the silent flickers, will be master of ceremonies. And a probable addition is a dramatization of "John Neade's Woman" starring Edward Arnold.

Musically, Al Dubin and Harry Warren are highlighted. They're the composers of the tunes in "Gold Diggers of 1937" and other Warner productions. They'll spotlight "How Could You," their latest tune.

Later in the evening pick-ups will be made from Omaha and Des Moines, centers of lesser networks now affiliating with Mutual. And, of course, typical of Mutual, a million dollars' worth of dance orchestras.

Here and there—George Burns and Gracie Allen are in New York for a brief visit, but will stage two of their shows from a Columbia playhouse before returning to California. In tonight's show they'll be aided by members of the Friar's Club . . . Mrs. Phil Baker makes her annual appearance on hubby's program next Sunday. She was an actress before marrying the comedian . . . Eddie Bergen, the ventriloquist who has been guesting with Rudy Vallee, is reported being auditioned for a show of his own. What will these radio people think up next?

More here and there. Both N. B. C. and Columbia will carry the marriage ceremonies of Princess Juliana of Holland and Prince Bernhard Zur Lippe Biesterfeld at The Hague early in January . . . Joe Cook has assembled 12 outstanding orchestra leaders as one section of his guest star list which will number more than 50 for his opening show January 2 . . . Eddie Cantor wants Oscar, the trained flea, back again. A reward of $1,000 is offered for Oscar's safe return . . . Alfred Gus Karger, Saturday night Mutual commentator, who has been speaking from WLW, will return to Washington and, beginning in January, his broadcasts will originate to the network from WOL.

In Noel Coward's "Red Peppers," of the "Tonight at 8:30" sketches, he wears a red wig. One night recently, according to Dick Himber's gossip sheet, Coward completely lost his composure when he saw Alexander Woollcott sitting in the front row of the orchestra wearing a red wig! He had borrowed it from Harpo Marx, so the story goes. The show was stopped cold for a short time.

Ronald Dawson, director of WOL's Northern Dramatic Company, has received a letter from San Quentin prison. The writer, a prisoner, inquires whether Producer Dawson would care to see some of his scripts, written behind prison walls, and perhaps produce some of them. He identified himself as being a former employe of the National Broadcasting Co.—with a pal collaborating in playwriting also with radio network experience. Naturally, Dawson is writing him to send the plays.

Miss Jane Whittaker Becomes Bride Of Lieut. de Lesdernier at Fort Myer

Army Couple Are Married in Old Chapel; Hold Reception at Club.

By Marylyn Reeve.

The quaint little red brick chapel at Fort Myer was the scene of the marriage yesterday of Miss Jane Whittaker, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. Frank Lawrence Whittaker, of Washington, and Lieut. Louis Frederick de Lesdernier, son of Mrs. Stafford de Lesdernier.

The ivory interior of the chapel, with its colorful array of flags on either side of the altar, was lighted by many tapers. Members of the Army and civilians alike filled the pews to witness the wedding of the daughter of the cavalry major, who took such an active part in the Inter-American Horse Show, and the young infantry officer from Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

The ushers wore O. D. uniforms and gleaming sabers. They were Lieut. Richard Bauer, Lieut. Roy McCarty, Lieut. John Sibley, Lieut. John Matheson, Lieut. Brooke Maury and Lieut Russell Hawkins. Lieut. Marshall Woodruff Frame was best man.

Miss Cynthia Martin, of Governors Island, N. Y., the maid of honor, wore a gown of rose beige moire fashioned with a sweeping bouffant skirt, and a fitted bodice with high neckline and short puffed sleeves. She wore a gold Juliet cap and her bouquet was of talisman roses.

Other attendants were Miss Betsy Barnett, Miss Arly Barnett, Miss Frances Roffe and Miss Virginia Burdette. They were costumed alike in gowns of the same bouffant style, of DuBarry rose moire. They, too, wore gold Juliet caps and carried arm bouquets of talisman roses.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, wore a gown of white satin made on flaring lines. The bodice was gathered into a yoke which formed a draped cowl neckline, and the simply designed skirt fell into a fan-shaped train. Her tulle veil was arranged in a cap effect held in place with sprays of orange blossoms. She carried white roses and liles of the valley.

At the recepton, in the Officers Club at the Army War College, another old custom was observed when the bride cut her cake with her husband's sword.

Mrs. Whittaker, who received the bridal couple, wore a gown of dark green crepe, made on simple lines, a brown velvet toque and a shoulder corsage of tea roses. Mrs. de Lesdernier was wearing a gown of dubonnet lace, with matching accessories and a corsage of violets.

Later Lieut. and Mrs. de Lesdernier left by motor on their wedding trip. She chose for her going away costume a three-piece suit of royal blue tweed trimmed with raccoon, with which she wore a blue hat, gray blouse and black accessories. They will make their home at Fort Sam Houston

Underwood & Underwood.

Lieut. and Mrs. Louis Frederick de Lesdernier, who were married yesterday afternoon, are shown after the ceremony at Fort Myer Chapel.

Miss Donovan Becomes Bride

Marriage to G. M. Fay Is Solemnized in Chevy Chase.

Miss Dorothy Margaret Donovan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Donovan, was wed to Mr. George Morris Fay, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Fay, of West Pittson, Pa., yesterday morning at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Chevy Chase. The Rev. Thomas G. Smythe performed the ceremony at 10:30 and a reception followed at the home of the bride's parents.

The bride's gown of parchment velvet was made with a bateau neckline and long close-fitting sleeves, and she wore a string of pearls. Her tulle veil fell from a cap held in place by orange blossoms, and she carried a prayer book with a shower of lilies of the valley. Her father gave her in marriage.

Her sister, Miss Henrietta Donovan, who served as her only attendant, was in a frock of turquoise taffeta made with short puffed sleeves and a train. With it she wore a small net turban, and carried an arm bouquet of yellow roses. Mr. Joseph Edward Fay was his brother's best man, and the ushers were Mr. Richard Shanahan, Mr. Walter Gallagher, Mr. Edward English, and Mr. James Farren, of Philadelphia.

After the reception, Mr. Fay and his bride left for Chicago, where they will make their home. The bride chose as her going away costume a gray wool suit, with which she wore gray accessories.

Mrs. Archbold to Leave.

Mrs. Anne Archbold will leave today or tomorrow for New York, where she will attend the wedding of her son, Mr. John D. Archbold, and Miss Betty Brown, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eliott C. Brown, of Rye, which will take place New Year's Day.

Notes of Society

OFFICIAL and RESIDENTIAL

Mrs. James Roosevelt and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt, received at the "at home" at the White House yesterday afternoon from 4 until 5 o'clock in the absence of Mrs. Roosevelt, who is still in Boston with her son, Mr. Franklin Roosevelt, jr.

The Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye following their usual custom, will be at home to members of the French colony in Washington and nearby Virginia and Maryland on New Year's day from 4 to 6 o'clock.

Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the Minister of the Union of South Africa, will not observe her day at home on Friday.

The Charge d'Affaires of the Brazilian Embassy and Mme. Do Prado have left for New York City, where they will meet their son, Antonio Franklin, who is arriving today aboard the Western World to spend his vacation in Washington with his parents.

Representative R. P. Hill and Mrs. Hill, of Oklahoma City, Okla., have arrived in Washington and have taken an apartment at the Roosevelt Hotel.

Lawrence Roberts Sail On Jamaica Cruise.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert sailed yesterday from New York for a cruise to Jamaica. They will return to Washington via Atlanta, Ga., where they will attend the inauguration of Gov. Rivers.

Mr. William T. Turner, of the State Department, has issued invitations to an eggnog party on New Year's Eve from 5 to 7.

Miss Marion Wade Doyle and Mr. Henry Grattan Doyle, jr., who have been visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, during the holidays, expect to return January 3 to Cambridge, Mass., where Miss Doyle is a student in Radcliffe College, and Mr. Doyle is at Harvard.

Miss Ray Entertains For Miss Grosvenor.

Miss Jane Calvert Ray entertained last evening at dinner at the Shoreham for Miss Gloria Grosvenor, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor. Her guests included Miss Suzanne Kappler, Miss Eula Schuermann, Miss Mary Janin, Miss Suzanne Barrett, Lieut. Carl Peden, Cadet Eugene Stamm, Midshipman Harry Tramsue, Mr. Paul O'Donoghue, Mr. Gilbert Edson and Mr. Bowdoin Craighill.

The color scheme of the table was pink and white. Each of the girl guests was presented with a wrist corsage.

Mrs. E. Josephine Medili is visiting her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Joseph Medill.

Szes Have Tea With Mrs. Ward

Washington Matron Gives Party for Ambassador and Wife of China.

Mrs. Dorothy Lee Ward, who is leaving today for a brief stay in Palm Beach, was hostess yesterday at a tea honoring the Ambassador of China and Mme. Sze. She has spent considerable time in China and the jasmine tea she served was some she had brought from there. Many of the furnishings of her Massachusetts avenue home are from China.

Mrs. Ward's gown was of black velvet with gold at the belt, and she wore gold beads and earrings. Mme. Sze was in a Chinese gown of black.

Mrs. Mae L. Hamilton and Mrs. James J. Davis presided at the tea table. Senator Davis, who returned recently from England, also was among the guests. Others included Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Stanley D. Embrick, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Charles E. Courtney, Brig. Gen. John C. Beaumont, Mr. and Mrs. Laurence V. Benet, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Frank Hamilton, Mrs. John Allan Dougherty and her guest, Mrs. Fenton B. Turck, of New York; Dr. and Mrs. Edward B. Meigs, Mr. Clarence Hewes, Dr. Joseph Nemecek and Commander Frank O'Brien.

Mrs. Ward will return to the Capital before leaving, January 22, aboard the President Coolidge for a trip around the world.

THE MERRY WHIRL by MARYLYN

The Elliott Roosevelts with their White House guests, the Robert Violettes and the James McCurdys, of Texas, yesterday morning motored to Leesburg. It was like old times for them to drive through the streets of the little town, for it was only two years and some months ago that the Roosevelts were occupying Widworthy, the home of Mrs. Arthur Chichester, there.

Luncheon time found the motorists still in the vicinity, so they went to the drug store which the Roosevelts had frequented during their stay out there and all six had a snack before starting back to town.

• • • •

When the Morans get together and give a party it really is one! Yesterday afternoon the Pete Morans entertained in their attractive home on Twenty-eighth street, and the house was simply packed and jammed, but comfortably so.

Jocelyn, the tall blonde hostess, was gowned in emerald green. Assisting her were Helen Moran Drury, in black velvet, whose husband, Abner, arrived later with Peggy Moran Kyle, who wore green lace.

Guests were gathered in the drawing room, where the hosts were receiving; in the dining room and the den cocktails, little tidbits, delicious maple-nut ice cream and countless other goodies were served. Downstairs, the bar was far from deserted. In the artistic lounge room, which is to the left and down two stairs, a cheery grate fire was crackling; there was a Christmas tree nearby and, over the mantel, a gay caricature of Dr. Pete.

Senora de Castilla Najera, wife of the Mexican Ambassador and her pretty niece, Lupe Davila, were among the early arrivals, as were Mme. de Laboulaye, in black with unique triangular silver buttons down the front, and her popular young daughter, Maria Therese. Also from the diplomatic set was the tall and jovial Minister of the Irish Free State, Mr. Michael MacWhite.

• • • •

Mrs. Peter Drury, in chic black and white, was amused at the predicament of her daughter-in-law, Helen, who had been posted serving the ice cream, but who wanted to be up and mingling with her friends. Every time a very good friend or relative approached she politely offered her the honor of serving, but in vain.

The two Kitty Fuquas were there—mother and daughter. Both are looking very well and Kitty, jr., is full of tales of her recent trip to Florida, and boasting a hint of a tan.

The Jim Morans, with the latter's brother, Eduardo Alfaro, were in more places in a short space of time than one would have believed possible. And speaking of Alfaros, when Dr. and Mme. Ricardo Alfaro arrived they had a little court of their own.

• • • •

Just to name a few of those we saw—there was Peggy Turner, of California, who had on one of those black and gold Dalmatian suits with an unusual flattish hat shrouded in a lacy veil—Louise Harrison Gwynn Tunure and her brother, Henry B. Gwynn—Kay Pearson and Frank Govern—Dewitt Mower, Helene Kravatz and Helen Barry, who immediately became involved in talk of their trips to and from the West Coast during past weeks, Helene lamenting having missed a football game by eight hours, because her plane was late—Waverly Taylor, always such a jolly person—the George Tribles, each in a different part of the house and answering questions as to where the other one might be—the Abbott Maginnisses, Gwen, wearing a smart black velvet creation on her head—Doggie Waggaman talking very earnestly to someone—Baroness von Pagenhardt, lovely as usual, wearing a honey colored fox-trimmed ensemble, and scores of others.

Diners Will Honor Ambassador Davies And Wife Tonight

The United States Ambassador to the U. S. S. R. and Mrs. Joseph E. Davies will be guests of honor at a dinner for 150 to be given tonight in the Presidential dining room of the Mayflower Hotel.

Mr. Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General, is chairman of the committee arranging for the dinner, and committee members include Representative William Bankhead, Speaker of the House; Senator Pat Harrison, Senator Key Pittman, Senator Robert La Follette, Senator F. Ryan Duffy, Senator James F. Byrns, Representative Sam Rayburn, Mr. Ewin L. Davis, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission; Mr. Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and Mr. William Stanley, former assistant to the Attorney General.

Miss Anne Child Is Presented To Society at Afternoon Tea

Debutante and Her Mother, Mrs. E. W. Pavenstedt, Receive in Flower-Decorated Drawing Room; Buffet Supper Served in Evening for Out-of-Town Guests.

Miss Anne Child, daughter of the late Richard Washburn Child, former United States Ambassador to Italy, was presented to Capital society yesterday afternoon at a tea given by her mother, now Mrs. E. W. Pavenstedt, and Mr. Pavenstedt, at their home on Twenty-fourth street.

She and her mother received in the drawing room on the second floor, arranged like a garden setting with the lovely bouquets sent to the debutante, in addition to the profusion of red roses used in decoration.

Miss Child was in a gown of white slipper satin with a square neck, short puff sleeves and a long, full skirt. With it she wore a spray of white orchids and carried a bouquet of red roses. Mrs. Pavenstedt's gown was of brown lace and she wore a corsage of gardenias.

In the dining room, where the buffet table was set, red roses and fresia were used in decoration. Friends of the debutante's mother who assisted in pouring included Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. James Vonbright, Mrs. Mark Bristol, Mrs. Robert Lister Macneil, Mrs. Nathan Wyeth and Mrs. Ford Brown, of Annapolis.

Among the friends of the debutante assisting were Miss Alice Noel Tuckerman, Miss Ethel Worthington, Miss Ruth Dove and Miss Carlile Porter, all of this season's debutante group; Miss Eleanor Flood, Miss Stellita Stapleton and Miss Adlumia Sterrett.

In the evening a buffet supper was served at which guests from out of town were entertained.

Miss Child is an attractive young person with brown hair which curls back from her forehead. She was graduated from the Ethel Walker School at Simsbury, Conn., and before that attended Miss Nightingale's School in New York. She came to Washington last autumn with her parents for the winter season. She loves riding and tennis as well as other out-of-door sports and is inclined to follow the literary path, in which both her mother and father distinguished themselves.

Exhibit Planned By Mrs. Ryland

Hildgarde Hamilton to Have Showing of Paintings Here Tomorrow.

Hildegarde Hamilton (Mrs. L. Hobart Ryland), who is well known in Washington, will receive friends at an exhibition of her paintings tomorrow and Friday from 3 p. m. to 11 p. m. at the Willard.

She has recently returned from a six-month painting trip in Europe which took her to Hungary, Austria, Switzerland and Italy. She was accompanied by her children, Meldagonde and Hamilton, and by her father, Prof. James Hamilton, a former resident of Washington, who carried on research in sociology at the Library of Congress here.

Miss Hamilton has just closed an exhibition of her paintings at the Pen and Brush Club and the National Arts Club, in New York. After her exhibition here, she will motor with Dr. Ryland and their children to Lexington, Ky., where Dr. Ryland is the head of the department of romance languages in the University of Kentucky.

She is a member of the Arts Club of Washington and the League of American Pen Women, at both of which she has exhibited in former years.

R. L. Jones Weds Juliette B. Jones

A wedding of interest in Virginia took place yesterday when Miss Juliette Burwell Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Courtney Byrd Jones, of Millwood, Va., and Dr. Russell L. Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Smith Jones, of Holliday, Mo., were married in Christ Church, Millwood. The Rev. John Jones, of New York City, brother of the bridegroom, performed the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She was gowned in white satin, over which was draped her tulle veil. Miss Louise Gatewood, of Danville, Va., was maid of honor and Mr. M. Flournoy Henry Jones, of Birmingham, Ala., and Mr. N. Burwell Jones, of Millwood, brothers of the bride, were groomsmen. Mr. Joseph Lawless, of St. Paul, Minn., assistant professor of anatomy in the University of West Virginia at Morgantown, was Dr. Jones' best man.

Congressional Club To Give New Year's Tea

Mrs. John Nance Garner, wife of the Vice President; Mrs. William Bankhead, wife of the Speaker of the House, and every "Cabinet lady" except Mrs. Hull, who is en route from South America, will assist at the tea to be given by the Congressional Club on New Year's Day. The tea will be held at the club's headquarters, 2001 New Hampshire avenue, from 5 to 7.

Members of the club will hold their dance on New Year's Eve instead of New Year's night, as originally announced.

Military Aide Guest Of Baroness von Below

Baroness von Below was hostess at dinner last evening in her home in Sixteenth street in honor of the Military Attache of the German Embassy and Frau von Boetticher.

Other guests included the Counselor of the Embassy, Herr Hans Thomsen, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Hampton Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. William Rosenberg and Judge and Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Aunt Asks Advice on How to Help Niece, Now 20, Who Made Unfortunate Marriage at Age of 16.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I shall appreciate your advice on a problem which is most serious and which, if intelligently handled, may change a tragic, pitiful existence into a useful, well-rounded life. I have a young niece whose home life was most unhappy. She grew up in a family of brothers and always had to fight her way with them, since both parents worshipped boys. There was never any peace or harmony in the home. Her father is a domestic tyrant. Her mother, extremely fine in many ways, is almost a fanatic on moral strictness. From the beginning, it seems, she expected her daughter to have the worldly wisdom of a matured woman.

* * * *

The daughter showed an interest in boys at a very early age, due, no doubt, to precocious physical development, and this utterly terrified her mother, who became so strict that the girl had no social life or youthful fun whatsoever. Soon two of the brothers were married and were constantly coming home with their wives and babies. Instead of my niece being the center of the home, with parties and friends as she should have had, all interest centered around the sons, daughters-in-law and grandchildren. How anyone could have been so blind as my sister is more than I can understand.

* * * *

Finally, the desire to be loved and wanted and to "have a place in the sun" caused my niece to marry at the age of 16, shortly after she had finished high school. Now, after four years, she is wretchedly unhappy and she and her husband actually dislike each other. They do not get along at all well, although I think she tries to make the best of things, since she seems so eager for love, sympathy and understanding. I am blaming neither of them. They are both mere children, although he is her social inferior and hampered by no finer feelings. While I am sorry for him, too, my interest very naturally centers in my niece. They are living with his mother in a most unattractive environment. The boy is unable to provide for his wife, and my sister buys all her clothing.

* * * *

Naturally, the girl is altogether inexperienced and does not know which way to turn. She has many fine qualities and, I am sure, much ability, but at present she is extremely restless, bewildered and wrechedly unhappy. Her family, including her sisters-in-law, her friends and neighbors go around with long faces, shaking their heads in pity, as though she had made an irreparable mistake. No one realizes more than I the seriousness of her mistake, but I do not believe because a girl made a mistake at 16 (through no fault of her own) that her life is necessarily finished at 20. I want so much to help the child find herself so that she may lead a useful and interesting life.

* * * *

I shall appreciate more than I can tell you any advice you may give for helping this bewildered child. She has never discussed her problem with me, although I think she would like to, as she is very wistful when with me. I think she knows I have greater understanding of her problem than others of her family. Can you tell me how to open the subject, and what I can do to help her get started in some useful and interesting work? I shall appreciate an early reply, as I am leaving for a visit to my home town soon, where I shall see my niece. Yours sincerely,

M. L. A.

Give Her Schooling.

DEAR M. L. A.: It would appear that your niece must be given some sort of financial lift if she is ever to rise above her present difficulty and find herself in a happier, more interesting and useful life. Do you have funds to send her to a business school? Or could her family be persuaded to finance such an undertaking? As an opening wedge to a discussion of plans for her future, you might ask her to visit you for a month, since she lives in another city. When she has come, if she doesn't make the initial overture toward a frank and free discussion of her problem, I advise you to take the bull by the horns and make that opening yourself.

* * * *

Some time when you are alone together during that visit you might simply say to her something of this sort: "Mary, I have been thinking a great deal about your problem, for I love you dearly, as you know. You have great gifts and you have your whole life ahead of you. Let's admit to each other, for the sake of discussion, that your marriage has been a mistake. A wholly understandable mistake, from my point of view, considering the circumstances of your girlhood, and a mistake which any girl might have made if similarly situated. But what are we going to do about it? It is so futile to refuse to face facts; to drift. If you can forgive my presumption—for I am daring to speak only because of my love for you, and my belief that you are capable of doing something really fine with your life—don't you think it would be well for us to work out some plan while you are here?"

* * * *

Then you might go on and tell her that you had thought of sending her to business school—letting her accept the offer as a loan to be repaid, if she chooses—or of persuading her parents to do so, or of helping her to prepare herself for any other type of career she might have thought of, or possess a natural aptitude for. Don't proffer any remarks touching on a positive breakup of her marriage, and make no criticism of her husband.

* * * *

Since he is unable to provide for her and they are mutually antagonistic, since she is dependent on her mother for clothing and looks to her mother-in-law for bed and board, it seems to me the whole family circle might respond with alacrity to any reasonably sound plan to make her self-supporting. The ideal solution might be to have her come to Washington and enter school under your chaperonage, possibly living under your roof. She might even find some sort of day-time work here, and study at nights, or vice versa.

* * * *

No amount of sentimental sympathy, philosophical counsel or cheerful encouragement is going to help the girl, unless she is supplied with a few actual stepping stones leading toward a better organized and more productive existence. An older woman, or one less sensitive, confused or starved for understanding and reassurance might rise to this situation and work her way out of it unaided and unencouraged. But the type of girl you describe must have someone to hold her hand, figuratively speaking, show her which road to take at this crossroads in her life, and even give her a boost on the way, if she is to get out of this morass and on to firmer ground.

Jewels at Resort Feature All Tints Of Florida Sunset

Palm Beach, Fla. (AP).—Jewels here reflect the tints of a Florida sunset. Conservatism has been tossed overboard. Design trends are decidedly bold, beautiful and bedazzling.

Diamonds are used as a "trim" for highly colored stones—emeralds, rubies and sapphires. Effects are sophisticated.

Extravagant fan-shaped clips encrusted with rubies and edged with diamonds are seen. Brooches, ear rings and clips match. Stones are genuine.

Colored semi-precious stones are used in dress sets for men. Garnets, tourmalines, topaz and crystal are favorites. The dial of a man's wrist watch is marked with tiny diamonds. The drum-shaped wrist watch is popular.

Folk Dishes Are Dedicated To New Year's

Wassail Bowl of English and Eggnog of South Specialty for Day.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

IN HOLLAND where the Dutch folk are making merry this Yuletide because of the approaching marriage of their attractive young princess, Juliana, no family would feel content unless on its New Year's table might be found "Oley Kooh" or Dutch New Year's cake.

The Dutch are not the only race who celebrate the New Year with special dishes dedicated to this happy season. In fact, a glance around the world shows many traditional cakes and other foodstuff which must be eaten at this season in order that health and fortune may follow one the whole 365 days around.

For instance, in Dixie, what hospitable family would be content if not able to serve callers on New Year's Day with eggnog made according to cherished recipes? And in these postprohibition days it may be well spiked with the cup that "cheers, but need not inebriate," provided one has learned the fine art of moderation.

In some parts of America where the English traditions linger, the ancient custom of eating "God's cakes" is still observed. These cakes, to be eaten on New Year's Day, are what we might call "individual mince pies." They are of a triangular shape, about half an inch thick and filled with a kind of mincemeat.

The custom, it is said, was started in Coventry, England, where baker boys went about the streets calling their wares at half a penny each on each first day of the new year.

Naturally, in proper English households, the cakes were eaten with liberal potions from the wassail bowl, filled to brimming on New Year's Day, and to which all comers were welcome to a right hearty share.

In case any Washingtonian would care to fill a wassail bowl, here is an ancient recipe for the concoction:

Making the Wassail Bowl.

Simmer a small quantity of the following spices in a teacupful of water, viz: Cardamoms, cloves, nutmeg, mace, ginger, cinnamon and coriander. When done put the spice to two, four or six bottles of port, sherry or madeira, with 1½ pounds of fine loaf sugar (pounded) to 4 bottles, and set all on the fire in a clean, bright saucepan. Meanwhile, have the yolks of 12 and the whites of 6 eggs well whisked up in it.

Then, when the spiced and sugared wine is a little warm, take out one teacupful, and so on for three or four cups, after which, when it boils, add the whole of the remainder, pouring it in gradually and stirring it briskly all the time, so as to froth it. The moment a fine froth is obtained toss in 12 fine, soft roasted apples, and send it up hot. Spices for each bottle of wine: 10 grains of mace, 46 grains of cloves, 37 grains of cardamoms, 28 grains of cinnamon, 12 grains of nutmeg, 48 grains of ginger, 49 grains of coriander seeds.

Another cake or bread the English always eat on New Year's Day is a kind of short bread especially favored when it is served with cheese and a big cup from the wassail bowl.

To return to nearby Maryland for the nonce, the perfect New Year's dinner in our neighboring State is regarded as truly complete if one of the courses includes Belgian hare a la Maryland. It is a recipe that dates back to Colonial days and has been preserved in many a hand-written recipe book. The mammies in Maryland kitchens prepare Belgian hare a la Maryland as per the following recipe:

Belgian Hare Ala Maryland.

1 rabbit
1 egg
1 cup of flour
1 small onion
alt, pepper and bay leaf, cracker crumbs.

Wash pieces of rabbit and wipe well. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and roll each piece in flour, beaten egg and cracker crumbs. Put in roaster with plenty of butter, one small onion, one bay leaf, cover and roast for two hours. When partly done add hot water and keep basting.

And this is the way the Dutch housewife makes her "Oley Kooh" or New Year's cakes.

Dutch New Year's Cakes.

2 cups butter
2 cups sugar
2 eggs
½ teaspoon salt
Rum
Flour
Yeast cake
½ cup warm water
Raisins, citron and cube sugar.

Cream butter, gradually add sugar and beat very light. Break in eggs, beating the batter vigorously, add salt, hot milk and sufficient flour to beat in easily; dissolve yeast cake in warm water and add to the batter; add a little more flour and beat until dough blisters. Leave it in a warm place to rise; when it is very light, dredge a board with flour and turn the dough on it. Roll out into sheets about ¾ inch thick, and cut with cakes with 1½ inch cutter. Open at the sides with a sharp knife and insert into the center of each cake 1 raisin, a bit of citron, and one sugar cube saturated with rum. Close the opening, wetting the edges to adhere more closely. Fry in a kettle of hot fat about ten minutes. Drain on brown paper and roll in powdered sugar.

New Beach Clothes Gay and Colorful

New York, (AP).—Beach clothes designed for sun-drenched sands in the South make a colorful procession. White rayon canvas slacks step out with colored shirts fastened with wooden buttons. Plus fours and mess jackets of blue or gray matelasse cottons appear with strapped beach sandals. Shorts, a little longer than last year, are shown with shirt tops and detachable shirts, all made of smooth surfaced silks.

The new beach coats of linen or pique are cut like fitted evening wraps and are ankle length. Beach frocks generally come in gay printed cottons or piques.

Potatoes and Milk Urged for Energy

About every third person these days seems to be refusing to eat potatoes in order to keep down body weight. Yet some of the foods eaten as substitutes contain more calories and are less beneficial.

Grownups, as well as children, require energy foods and potatoes and milk are the cheapest of these in the average diet. The potato actually contains less starch than many other vegetables. White boiled potatoes contain only 18 per cent starch, 2 per cent protein and 78 per cent water. Sweet corn, baked beans and fresh lima beans contain 20 per cent starch, while dried peas and beans contain 60 per cent; macaroni and spaghetti, 72 to 76 per cent; rice, 24 per cent and white patent process flour averages 75 per cent.

Sauerkraut Roll.

For a sauerkraut roll, take 2 or 3 pounds of round steak cut ¾-inch thick. Sprinkle salt and pepper over it. Cover with thin slices of bacon. Place as much kraut on this as possible and roll up and fasten with skewers. Put in covered roasting pan with a pint of water and bake one hour in a moderate oven. Then thicken the liquid with flour. Garnish with lemon slices.

Woolens Require Frequent Washing

WOOL should be washed often because its rough surface readily catches dirt. Gritty particles are hard on wool fabrics and once embedded in the fibers they are difficult to remove without rubbing, a bad thing to do when handling wet wool.

Before washing woolens, brush or shake them thoroughly to remove as much loose dirt as possible. Knitted things should be measured. Either lay them out on a flat surface and trace the outline with a soft pencil or take measurements with a ruler or tapeline.

Use plenty of soapsuds and lukewarm water of an even temperature for both the washing and rinsing. Handle as gently as possible. For badly soiled pieces, use two soap baths. A teaspoonful of glycerine in the rinsing water will help to keep the articles fluffy and soft.

After the final rinse, roll each garment in a towel for a moment to remove excess moisture, pull it gently into shape to fit measurements taken before washing and dry it flat at room temperature. Never dry woolens over a radiator or out-of-doors in cold weather. Extreme heat or cold is apt to be disastrous to wet wool.

Delores Del Rio Owner Of 100 Pairs of Shoes

Eggnog Ideal Refreshment For Holidays

Bowl of Hot, Spicy Punch Will Please Callers on New Year's.

Fancy Sandwiches, Cakes and Cookies Served With Beverage.

By Rebekah Blake.

FOR GUESTS who just "drop in" during the holiday season, or for New Year's Day callers, you must have ready to serve refreshments that take as little as possible of your time away from your guests. Eggnog is the traditional beverage for this time of the year, therefore be ready to serve glasses of this foamy drink with a sprinkling of nutmeg and some fruit cake made from your best recipe.

If you do not care to serve an alcoholic beverage, you may make your eggnog without this constituent or you may mix up a bowl of hot spicy punch. This will "hit the spot" especially if the weather is chilly on New Year's Day.

Both the eggnog and the fruit cake—or cookies if you prefer—may be prepared in advance and thus cause little trouble after the guests have arrived. The nog may be made several days in advance and the beaten egg added just before it is served.

If you want to serve more substantial refreshments with the eggnog, fancy sandwiches are in order. These may be of cheese, deviled ham, olives, fish paste or relish. They may be composed so they are filling as well as attractive. Fancy shapes for the sandwiches make the plates more interesting.

Grapefruit and orange peel candy and glazed nuts are special treats for holiday entertaining, so be sure to have plenty of them on hand, for it is surprising how quickly they will disappear.

Christmas Eggnog.

6 egg whites
1 cup sugar
6 egg yolks
1 pint heavy cream
1 cup (8 ounces) rum
1 cup (8 ounces) whisky
Nutmeg

Beat the egg whites until stiff; beat in the sugar gradually. Beat the egg yolks until thick. Whip the cream in a large bowl; fold in the beaten whites, yolks and liquor. Serve in punch glasses and sprinkle with nutmeg. This makes 12 servings.

Eggnog.

(If you don't care for whisky.)
1 egg white
1 egg yolk
¾ cup milk
2 teaspoons sugar
Flavoring to taste

Beat the egg white with a rotary beater until light. Beat the egg yolk slightly; beat in the sugar, milk and flavoring. Fold this mixture into the beaten white. Serve cold in a tall glass. One serving.

Ribbon Sandwiches.

½ pound cooked ham
1 can pimientos
2 hard-cooked eggs
½ pint sweet pickles
½ cup mayonnaise
1 loaf of bread
¼ pound butter
¾ pound cream cheese (plain or pimiento).

Chop the ham and drained pimientos together; moisten with salad dressing to make a paste which can be spread. Chop the pickles and eggs together; moisten with dressing. Remove all the crusts from the loaf of bread and cut lengthwise of the loaf into 4 slices of equal thickness; keep the slices in order. Spread the bottom slice with butter, then with half the ham and pimiento mixture. Butter both sides of the next slice and press in place over the bottom slice. Spread with all the egg and pickle mixture. Spread both sides of the third slice with butter; press in position; spread with the remainder of the ham and pimiento mixture. Butter the bottom of the top slice and press in position. Cut down through the loafmaking ribbon slices about ¼ inch thick.

Candied Fruit Peel.

Remove all membrane from orange or grapefruit skins. Cover with cold water, bring to boiling point and boil 20 minutes, drain and repeat twice, cooking the third time until peel is tender. Cut in narrow strips with scissors. For 2½ cups peel, put in sauce pan 2 cups sugar and 2-3 cup water or fruit juice. Stir over low heat until sugar is dissolved, add peel, bring to boiling point and cook gently until peel is transparent and sirup registers 230 F. on candy thermometer. Stir occasionally with a fork to prevent burning. Lift from sirup to cake cooler placed over a tin sheet, to drain. Roll in granulated sugar and return to cake cooler or wax paper to dry. Use as a confection or in mincemeat. If the peel is to be dipped in chocolate, do not roll in sugar.

For colored fruit peel, pour half the sirup into a second sauce pan, color 1 portion green with food colors, and cook the peel as directed.

Spicy Bowl.

1 gallon sweet cider
1½ pounds brown sugar
6 inches of stick cinnamon
1 blade mace
1 tablespoon whole cloves
1 tablespoon whole allspice
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons crystallized ginger

Mix all these ingredients in a large sauce pan and let simmer for 10 minutes. Strain, and add grapefruit juice from 2 ten ounce cans and also ½ cup orange juice. Reheat but do not boil. Serve steaming hot. Makes 4 quarts.

Feathers Still Dominate As Millinery Trimming

Paris (U.P.).—Every one is weary of feathers and quills, but they still dominate the millinery field and take first place as trimming. Fat bows, choux of velvet and twists of felt, that are made to look like feathers, trim most of the dressier hats. Evening toques still are small and shallow and are almost invariably made up in small velvet flowers or in fits of colorful feathers sewn to a small skull cap.

Keep Ready-Made Delicacies for Drop-In Guests During Holidays

When friends drop in to call during the holiday season, be prepared to serve them easy as well as delicious refreshments. Make a fruit cake from your favorite recipe and serve it with eggnog or a hot spicy punch.

Even if you are not giving a party, have a bowl of eggnog ready to serve to your unexpected guests. The nog may be previously prepared and beaten egg whites stirred in at the last moment to make it fluffy.

Cooking Hints

Here is an idea for using the cranberry sauce, celery and roast fowl that are left from a holiday dinner. Cut a mold of cranberry sauce into cubes, dice celery and left-over meat. Mix with well-seasoned French dressing and serve with a touch of mayonnaise.

Place a slice of canned pineapple on individal salad plates. Cover with a half-inch slice of canned cranberry sauce and cover round with a slice of orange. Garnish with cress and serve with French dressing.

To keep your breakfast grapefruit under control, prepare the fruit as for salad, separating the segments of fruit from the skin. These segments may be kept whole or they may be broken into pieces. Place them on saucers and serve with sugar or salt.

Serve candied bananas with your meat. Peel six bananas and arrange in oiled baking dish. Mix ¼ cup water and ½ cup white karo and pour over bananas; dot with butter and bake in a hot oven for 10 to 15 minutes until the bananas begin to soften. Baste with the sauce several times during cooking.

Saffron is quite commonly used as a coloring for holiday breads. One kind of English bread consists of three saffron-colored biscuits of graduated size placed on top of each other and baked.

Chocolate raisins are being served at card clubs, teas and party affairs. They can be bought at local confectioners or prepared at home. Their fruity flavor is satisfying, but they are not as rich as some other confections.

Corn Meal Recipes For Post Contest Are Due Saturday

CORN MEAL may be as delicious as it is inexpensive. It may be used in bread, muffins, mush, waffles, with cheese, with hominy, in spoon bread and in corn meal sticks and in many other ways.

Do you have an interesting recipe using corn meal? If you do, type or write it neatly and send it to Rebekah Blake, The Post Foods Editor, before Saturday noon. You may win a cash prize in this week's recipe contest. Be sure to write your name and address clearly on your recipe.

The cash awards are $3 for first prize, $2 for second prize and $1 for each of the last three prizes.

Only one recipe will be accepted from each contestant.

Scald 1 cup milk and add 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons sugar and ½ teaspoon salt. When lukewarm, add 1 yeast cake dissolved in 2 tablespoons lukewarm water and 1½ cups flour. Beat thoroughly, cover, let rise until light, cut down, add 1 egg and egg yolk well beaten and enough flour to knead, about 1½ cups. Let rise until double in bulk, toss the mixture on a floured cloth. Shape dough in strips the size of a pencil and 20 inches long, braid each three strips, cut in 4-inch pieces, put on greased tin sheet, brush with egg white and sprinkle with poppy seeds. Let rise and bake 15 minutes in 400 F. oven at first, decreasing heat to 350 F. as biscuits begin to brown.

Jewel Buttons Accent Dress.

Paris (AP).—Jewel studded buttons achieve color accents for many of the new dark dresses. Lelong runs a row of gold-set sapphire buttons down both sides of a blistered black crepe dress. One of Chanel's new cashmere printed cotton blouses has ruby-red buttons on a dark green foliage background.

Garnishes for Soup.

Be sure to keep your mind's eye color-conscious and accent your light soups with light garnishes—grated raw carrots on potato soups and salter whipped cream on cream of tomato soup. Serve croutons, pop corn, cheese toast, toasted shredded almonds—grated cheese or tiny cheese cubes, chopped green pepper and parsley and paprika are excellent helps for soups.

Average Britisher Prefers Blondes But Bars Make-Up

London, Dec. 27 (U.P.).—Former King Edward may have "fallen for" a brunette but a blonde has 20 per cent better chance of finding a husband in England, a year-end survey revealed tonight.

Official statistics of the board of trade, shop and cinemas and "off-the-record" confidences of wives shattered the illusions of Americans that the male Briton is a tall, lean individual with a whisky-and-soda and a derby hat.

Here's the composite Englishman: He's 30 years old, been married three years, likes "mousetrap" cheese instead of gorgonzola, is slightly less than five feet eight inches in height, wears blue socks, drinks beer, wears a soft gray hat and rarely goes to church.

The average Briton's wife is two years and five months younger than he and has one child, born 18 months after their marriage.

Just at present the child is slightly more likely to be a boy.

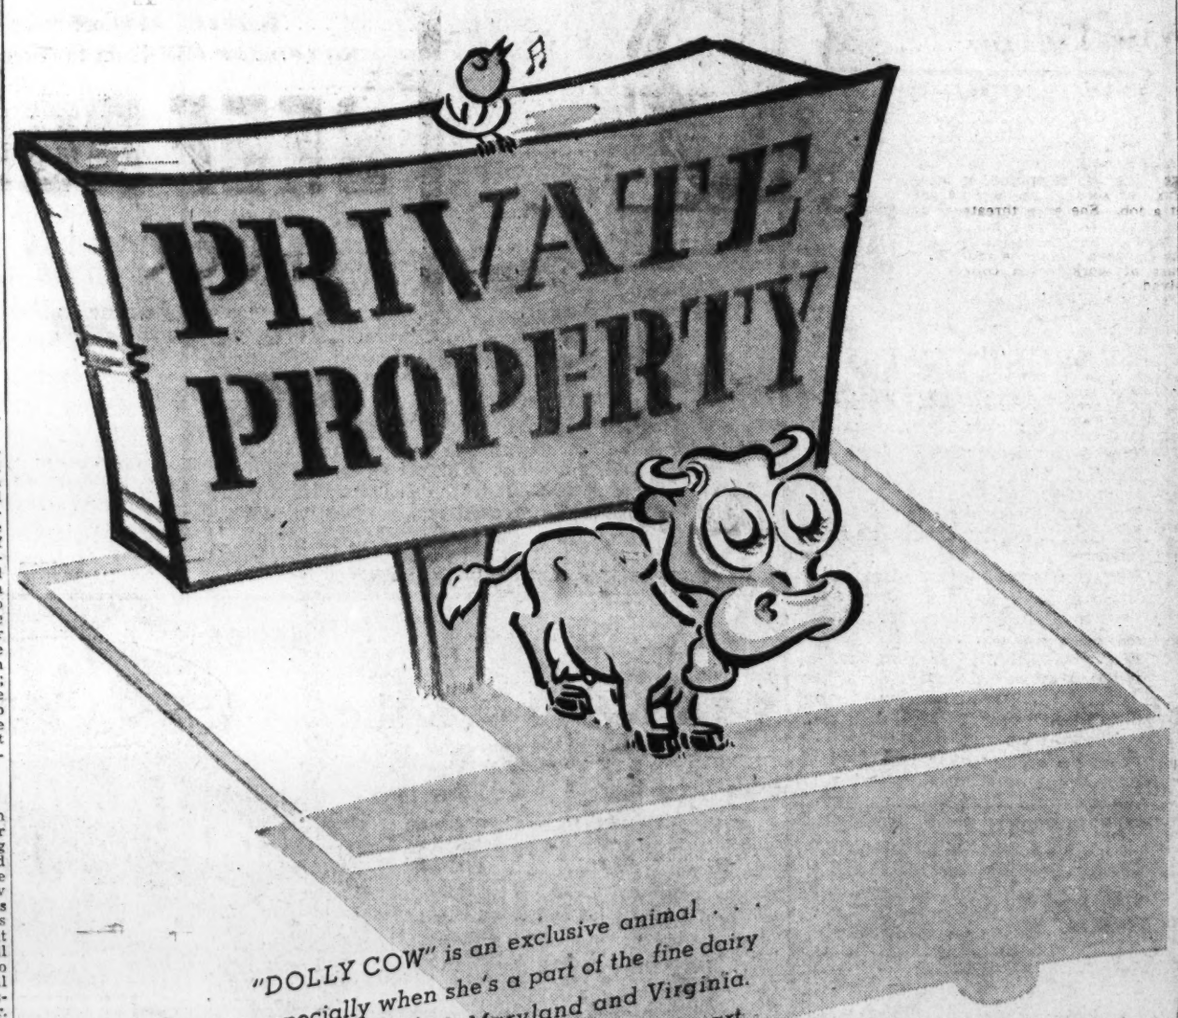
The fact that the average Briton prefers blondes is officially proved.

The blonde has light brown hair, blue eyes and is five feet, three inches tall, 34 inches around the bust, 28 around the waist, has a hip measurement of 37 inches.

She uses lipstick and rouge but no mascara or eye-shadow. Mr. Average Briton won't let her.

Flower Styles Varied.

The smartest complement for the printed dress is a bright nosegay from the florists. Flowers are no longer limited to the conventional shoulder corsage.



"DOLLY COW" is an exclusive animal especially when she's a part of the fine dairy herds of nearby Maryland and Virginia. Hog-pens and horse-stables may be a part of farm life, but they're kept far away from the cow barns and yards. Your dairy farmer watches his health ratings. He keeps his cows in spotlessly clean barns and sees to it that the adjacent yard is clean, well-drained and free from contaminating surroundings.

THE MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA MILK PRODUCERS' ASSOCIATION is composed of over 1100 farmers who produce the world's highest quality milk and 90% of all the milk shipped into Washington.

Belle of South, Transplanted in West, Amused at Ancestor Worship of East

Mrs. Miles Finds Pursuit of Chosen Profession Enthralling Career.

By Elizabeth Young.

Evelyn Trezevant Williams Miles, who was born in Charleston, S. C., reared in Virginia and transplanted to Arkansas after her marriage some twenty-odd years ago, reports an interesting discovery made since coming East nearly a year ago to make a home for her New Dealer husband in Washington. Her husband, Vincent Miles, is a member of the Social Security Board.

Mrs. Miles' discovery is this: Whereas the Middle West gauges your importance as a social being by what you are and what you do, the East rates you principally by who your forefathers were.

Not that the discovery leaves Mrs. Miles abashed at all, for her family tree stems from such notable sires as William the Conqueror, Charlemagne, Thomas Moore, Robert the Bruce (the one she's proudest of) and other worthies. Ten generations of her forbears on her mother's side, the Junkins', are buried in a graveyard at Lexington, Va., and she is kin to the Byrds, the Fairfaxes, the Carters, the Dandridges, the Spotswoods, the Andersons, and the Taylors of Carolina, to cite just a few names scribbled at random by this reporter after a confidential peep at her genealogical chart.

As a girl, Mrs. Miles took it for granted she had ancestors. She never bothered about them especially, she says. On being transplanted to Arkansas she forgot all about them in discovering a passionate affinity for gardening. She had such success with growing things that she was constantly in demand as consultant regarding her neighbors' gardening projects. When this gently-bred flower of the Old South, who had been schooled at Sweet Briar College (near Lynchburg, Va.) announced to her husband one day, after they had been married more than 10 years, that she was going to Columbia University and study to become a landscape architect, he thought she had lost her mind. Also he thought she would never do it. But she did.

Not knowing whether her marriage could survive the shock of such an adventurous undertaking on her part, but only knowing that she must follow the star of a consuming ambition to become a doer, as it were, she packed and went.

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. VINCENT MILES.

Proud of Ability

"I slaved," she says of her course at Columbia. "I took a three years' course in two years. I took 19 points where ordinarily only 8 are allowed. And I got all A's and B's, except for one professor in sketching, who never gave anyone better than C. Today, the thing I'm proudest of, next to my son—and my husband, of course—is this certain ability I have to accomplish something in my chosen field of work.

Back in Arkansas after her course was completed, she designed landscapes for clients, was assistant supervisor of planning under the FERA project in Oklahoma, Colorado, Missouri, Arkansas, Texas and Louisiana. She was an officer in the Arkansas and regional Federation of Garden Clubs. She was a speaker on regular programs of university extension courses, and she wrote on horticultural subjects for Arkansas, Oklahoma and Missouri newspapers. Leaving all this enthralling professional activity behind to join her husband in Washington, Mrs. Miles was first astonished and then amused to find herself living once more in an atmosphere of ancestor worship.

"Now that I am back East, I suddenly find my ancestors are much more important than myself," she says, half wryly. "They give one a lot to live up to, it seems. And that may be an advantage or a handicap, according to how you look at it. Speaking of handicaps, history says the wife of William the Conqueror had great, big feet, so I guess that accounts for the size of mine. Anyway, I've always held her responsible."

She studied her long, slender feet, smartly clad in brown leather gillies, a moment before observing:

"Ancestors aside, there's not very much difference in real people the world over. Localities don't matter much, either. I don't think one's background is half so important as the life one carves out for one's self. Everyone has certain valuable potentialities within himself which can be developed anywhere. And one's success in developing these potentialities for the improvement of the society in which one lives should be acceptable proof of one's social worth, it seems to me."

Althouh already waist deep in the swift moving current of Washington's social life as it whirls and eddies about official personages and those who "belong" by virtue of ancestral eminence, Mrs. Miles is still finding time to go on with her chosen profession. She has "done" a garden for Mrs. J. Bruce Kremer since coming to Washington, another for the children of Mr. Henry A. Gardner, and is now supervising planting on the estate of William A. Julian, treasurer of the United States Mint.

Some part of every day is spent over her drawing board, placed near tall, uncurtained windows which glitter with shelves of rare old glass and bottles she collects, and every day finds her tramping over the grounds of some new landscaping project. The late afternoon interview granted this reporter—sandwiched in between a luncheon engagement and a cocktail party—was twice interrupted by telephone calls having to do with planting on the Julian estate.

Loves Out-of-Doors.

Mrs. Miles "loves everything having to do with the out-of-doors." She hunts, rides, shoots, swims, golfs, plays tennis. And she says landscape gardening is kin to music, painting and interior decorating.

"It could just as well be called exterior decorating as landscape gardening," she says. "The composition is the same whether placing furniture or posing a subject for a portrait or photograph, or writing music except that landscape gardening is a more difficult, because a more changing medium.

"Out-of-doors, you have to contend with changing light, changing weather, changing color. Therefore more imagination is required for equally good effect. You strive for rhythm as you do in music. Even the same words are used—repitition, climax, main point of interest. The whole theory of composition is the same——"

She broke off to exclaim: "Life is just too short! So many things one would love to do; so little time in which to do them. The temptation to use one's self up is almost overwhelming. And now I must run ——" Which she did.

Brides Trained To Make Living Outside Home

College Expands Courses to Prepare Graduates for Special Careers.

By the Associated Press.

Santa Barbara, Calif., Dec. 29.—Bride-training is something more than teaching the art of home-making, the Santa Barbara State College has decided. A girl also should know how to make a living, as well as how to run a home.

The bride-training course at the college has been expanded to prepare graduates not only for marriage but for careers as teachers, dieticians, journalists, equipment specialists and clothing and furnishing specialists.

Miss Jean Krueger, head of the home economics department, gives six key qualities as requisites for success in home economics. She lists them as cleanliness, appearance, initiative, ambition, personality and integrity, and she explains them this way:

"Personal cleanliness: This is the basic principle without which success may never be attained in this work.

"Appearance: Fine clothes are not required, but a neat appearance is both invaluable and required. One must learn to look well at all times, even on a meager income, and above all else use good taste in her dress.

"Initiative: She must have the desire to seek new and better means of performing her work, and must never be satisfied to 'just get by.'

"Ambition: She must be ambitious to get ahead, no matter from what level she is starting.

"Personality: She must develop a pleasing personality. To do this she must strive for good posture, strength of character without stubbornness, and the ability to get along with others.

"Integrity: She must be reliable and thorough, and when given an assignment must be sure that it is carried through to its completion."

No longer do the classes teach sewing and cooking alone. The added studies are family relations, child psychology, consumer problems, housing and home planning, foods and nutrition, textiles and clothing, household management and dietetics.

Each senior, after practical experience in the college cafeteria, not only in preparing but in buying foods, is required to live six weeks in a model home management house, a cottage located on the campus.

There the girls plan the meals, manage the budget, care for and arrange the house furnishings and take turns in positions as hostess, housekeeper and maid.

Wise Parents Avoid Conflict

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ALICE did not want to go to college. She was determined to leave school as soon as she was 16 and get a job. She even threatened to run away from home if her parents insisted on her preparing for college and then taking the added four years of work which college involved.

Finally her parents gave in on the one condition that Alice should take the college entrance examinations and do her best to pass them. By this means, they felt, a door was left open. If she changed her mind or, if having worked a year, she felt a need for further training or education, she could still enter college.

Alice agreed to the compromise and now that the conflict with her parents was removed, did excellent work at school and after passing the examinations found a job.

Had her parents insisted on their own way they would have gained nothing and the child would have lost a great deal. As a result of her conscientious work during the last two years of school, Alice had at least a basis of an education.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

IT SEEMS that the singers, like the toe-dancers, are getting younger every year, and if the trend keeps up the Dionnes will be auditioning for the Metropolitan by the time they're 6. First, I was amazed at the talent of little Deanna Durbin, and now I am astonished all over again at 15-year-old Betty Jaynes (last name, Schultz), the child soprano who recently rocked musical Chicago when she sang Mimi in "La Boheme."

ALICE HUGHES.

True, Betty at first glance looks as much as 18, especially in her first really grown-up fur coat. But when I inspected her minutely at the Ambassador Hotel I discovered that she was really just a little girl, with ash blonde hair, a baby face, blue eyes and more than any one girl's share of good looks. She's certain to be a treat for the eye as well as the ear.

Her mother, the proud and sensible Mrs. Louis Schultz, tells me that doctors say Betty's voice is entirely mature—but that they are going to take mighty good care that it isn't overworked for a few years.

• • • •

Meanwhile, the newest wunderkind was whirling around with excitement. She was far less impressed with the fact that she was to meet Impresario Johnson of the opera than with the thrill of seeing Radio City. She says she is going to sing once a week the rest of the winter, and go to school—"I hate school," says the minx—the rest of the time.

• • • •

"Next year, when I'm 16, I'm going to sing 'Juliet,'" Betty told me. And I'm convinced that will be something wondrous to see and hear. Imagine—a 16-year-old Juliet with a fine voice and real beauty! Oh, these darned kids! They make us feel like a million and a half, net.

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—If you're coming in for a visit, I hope you get a chance to see little Ruth Gordon's performance in the revival of Wycherly's "The Country Wife," and what a bawdy old show it is. Ruthie lets off one combination scream and squawk in the second act that is worth the price of admission . . . Sylvia Sydney is taking Italian lessons, she tells me, because she is going to make an Italian talkie in, of all places, Italy . . .

• • • •

There was a sad revelation to hundreds at the New Yorker Hotel, not long ago, when the singer, Connie Boswell, was wheeled to the dance floor for her vocal performance. Comparatively few knew of her crippled state, for on their stage appearances she and her two sisters were always grouped about the piano when the curtain rose, with Connie on the bench. But there's no curtain on a cafe dance floor—and the audience gasped when lovely Connie was wheeled in! . . .

Jane Riesenfeld, daughter of Dr. Hugo, the music-master, finally got out of Spain safely. She was there learning new dances when the civil war struck. And one guess as to what she's going to do now! Right, Betty Jane! She's going to write a book! . . .

• • • •

Eleanor Young, one of the prettiest and peppiest of the year's debs, has now received the accolade. She has had her picture taken with Alfred G. Vanderbilt at the Club El Morocco. Now she's official! . . .

Local matinee girls are primping frantically to greet Dream Man Brian Aherne when he appears as Iago to Walter Huston's "Othello."

Edith Barber, food editor of a local gazette, has thought up a new one. Next summer she aims to take a group of food-minded girls on a cookery tour of Europe, stopping and studying at all the places famed for their cuisine! . . . Our famed dancing master, Arthur Murray, tells me that his 10-year-old twin daughters care far more about horses and riding than about La Danse!

Clothes arrive en masse for the Paris mid-season openings. I find lots of embroidery; capes very good; shorter hem-lines; trains on evening dresses. Much pink for evening wear and on blouses; much lace; lots of pleated drapes. And the removable sleeves on evening frocks are very interesting. Nothing extraordinary about the clothes, so far—but they're very nice indeed.

Beautiful Eyes Are Achieved With Make-up

BEAUTIFUL EYES are not so much a gift of the gods as the result of proper make-up, believes Perc Westmore, Hollywood make-up authority. Here are some of his suggestions for making eyes appear large and expressive:

See that the hair is a proper frame to the face. Dark hair usually will set eyes off to better advantage than light hair.

Eyebrows should not be plucked too much and should be allowed to follow the bony structure above the eye. Brows should be brushed up and away from the nose. The old style of brows far above the eye is obsolete because a wide space between the eye and brow tends to make the eye appear much smaller.

Mascara on the lower lashes is another taboo for the girl who wants big eyes. There is a natural dark line along the bottom of the eye. When this is emphasized by mascara, the line is harshened and calls attention to the lower outline of the eye.

Mascara and eyebrow pencil should be the last touches to the make-up and before they are applied all powder should be removed with a dampened thumb and forefinger or a clean, damp brush.

A medium-sized eye, of course, will look small in a large face and large in a small face. For this reason, a girl with a large face is allowed a few tricks in making her face appear smaller.

Latest Type of Hat Box Transparent As Glass

The adaptability of plastic materials to household uses has inspired a new type of hat box, transparent as glass, so the hat may be seen at a glance. Made of cellulose acetate plastic, this bandbox marks a revolutionary step forward in closet convenience. Circular in shape, with a close-fitting lid, it protects the hat from dust without hiding it from sight. The material is lightweight, yet strong and durable, and can be kept immaculate with a damp cloth. The crystal-like effect of the transparent plastic adds a decorative touch to the closet shelves and some of the boxes are ornamented with bows of bright-colored ribbon drawn through slots at the side and tied across the top.

Oranges and Potatoes.

Mix sweet potatoes with oranges and bake in orange shells, to serve around roast pork. Select six oranges, cut a slice off the top of each and scoop out the pulp. Pare and boil six sweet potatoes and mash. Mix with the orange pulp, season with salt, pepper and butter. Fill the orange cups with mixture and heat in oven; a few minutes before serving, top each orange with a marshmallow and put back in oven until the marshmallow puffs and browns.

Banana Recipes Show Wide Diversity

Many New Dishes Given; Mrs. C. J. Allen Wins Post's First Prize.

YOU certainly don't have to eat bananas raw! For in The Post's recipe contest last week there were recipes submitted for using bananas in this simple form, with many variations, but there were also recipes for banana breads, bananas baked as vegetables would be, bananas in puddings, pies nd cakes, cooked with meat and as sandwich fillings.

The first prize of $3 was awarded to Mrs. C. J. Allen, 1704 Sixteenth street southeast, for her recipe for banana surprise.

Mrs. Charles W. Pierpoint, of 1104 Wilkes street, Alexandria, Va., won second prize of $2 for her recipe for mincemeat banana pie; the banana bran muffin recipe submitted by Blanche Craig, of Shipman, Va., won the third prize, $1, and Mrs. Bernard P. Hessler, 218 S street northeast, won fourth prize, $1, for her banana and liverwurst sandwich spread. The fifth prize, also $1, went to Mrs. Charles C. Kennon, 615 Fifty-first street, West Palm Beach, Fla., for her recipe for raw banana salad.

Here is Mrs. Allen's recipe:

Banana Surprise.

Peel 3 bananas, cut into halves, then cut each half in two lengthwise. Mix 2 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons sugar, few drops lemon juice. Spread a layer of this mixture on a banana and then put two pieces together like a sandwich.

Make a rich pie crust, adding ¼ teaspoon baking powder. Roll out and cut pieces to cover banana sandwich. Spread each piece of dough with peach or apricot jam, lay on bananas and roll up, wetting the edges of the crust to adhere. Brush over with egg white or cream. Make a few holes in the top with a fork and bake in moderate oven (350 F.) for 20 minutes.

Serve hot or cold, with or without whipped cream, and a few drops of lemon extract. Makes six servings.

Here is Mrs. Pierpoint's recipe:

Mincemeat Banana Pie.

Pastry for 2-crust pie
3 green-tipped bananas
[illegible] mincemeat
1½ tablespoons lemon juice

Line pie plate with pastry. Peel and slice bananas to one-third-inch thickness. Cover pastry with layer of sliced bananas, add mincemeat, sprinkle with lemon juice, and cover with another layer of bananas. Cover top with pastry. Bake in a hot oven (450 F.) 15 minutes, then reduce temperature to moderate (350 F.) and bake for 30 minutes, or until brown.

Blanche Craig's recipe follows:

Banana Bran Muffins.

1 cup bran
1 cup sour milk
2 tablespoons butter or shortening
4 tablespoons sugar
1 egg
1½ cups flour
½ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
¾ cup banana cut very fine

Soak bran in sour milk. Cream together the butter or shortening and the sugar. Add egg and beat well. Mix and sift flour, soda, baking powder, salt and cinnamon, and beat into cream mixture alternately with soaked bran. Now fold in banana and pour into greased muffin tins. Bake in moderately hot oven, 400 F., about 25 to 30 minutes.

Mrs. Hessler's recipe:

Banana and Liverwurst.

Mash one-fourth pound liverwurst sausage with one large banana and three tablespoons chili sauce. Salt to taste. Butter half the slices of bread, spread the mixture on the others and put together. Makes about eight sandwiches.

Here is Mrs. Kennon's recipe:

Raw Banana Salad.

Peel the banana, scrape lightly and coat with lime juice to preserve the color, also to add flavor, split through the center lengthwise and spread with raspberry jelly, put the two halves together again and coat all over with finely chopped pecans. Lay on a bed of shredded lettuce and serve with a dressing made of half mayonnaise and half whipped cream.

Mother Kills Slayer of Son In Courtroom

Kentucky Woman Shoots 2 Others in Avenging Death of Kin,

By the Associated Press.

Jackson, Ky., Dec. 29.—A mountain woman avenged the slaying of her son in Breathitt County courtroom today in a burst of fire that killed the accused slayer and wounded two spectators.

The pistol shots came at the opening of court where in the old days many men were tried for feud killings. The shots fatally wounded Johnny Shepherd, charged with the Christmas Eve shooting of 17-year-old Harvey Gabbard, and sent some 150 spectators pell mell for safety.

Mrs. Viola Wickline was the 35-year-old maddened mother from whom a deputy sheriff snatched a pistol a few moments too late. She leaped to her feet and fired four times, according to County Attorney Alfred M. Russell, with no warning other than "shouting a vile name at Shepherd." In jail, she refused to discuss the shooting.

Shepherd, an 18-year-old cripple, accused of shooting young Gabbard, crumpled before the rail, two bullets through his stomach. George Shouse, 27, fell with a punctured lung.

Moss Noble, 25, an attorney, present like Shouse as a spectator, dropped with a bullet in his leg. One of the bullets knocked the hat from the knee of Howard Moore, another spectator, and bruised his knee cap.

Shepherd died several hours later. Shouse, barring pneumonia, was expected to recover. Noble was taken home after a bullet had been removed from the muscles in his leg.

There were about 150 persons in the courtroom. County Judge George W. Little had just rapped for order for the examining trial of Shepherd.

Mrs. Wickline sat with County Attorney Russell some 15 feet from Shepherd.

"She sprang to her feet and began shooting before any one could interfere," Russell said.

Deputy Sheriff John E. Rice snatched the pistol after the fourth shot, and Mrs. Wickline and three other persons were rushed to jail. Murder warrants were sworn out against her and against her husband, William Wickline, a farmer; Buck Gabbard, 62, former miner, a relative of young Gabbard, and Mrs. Mattie Downs Haddix, all of whom had been sitting near Mrs. Wickline. Judge Little ordered them held without bail.

Asked the reason for the murder charges against Wickline, Buck Gabbard and Mrs. Haddix, the county attorney declared, "They were all there," and added, "That woman (Mrs. Wickline) got a pistol somewhere." He said he didn't know whether she had it when she came to court.

Gabbard, a taxicab driver, son of Mrs. Wickline by a former husband, was shot to death in front of a poolroom here. The Commonwealth claimed Johnny Shepherd fired as Gabbard and Johnny's brother, Noah Shepherd, scuffled after a dispute. Noah Shepherd was charged with accessory to murder. He was taken to Winchester today for safe keeping.

Tea in Honor of Dr. Mary Swartz Rose Postponed on Account of Her Illness

Noted Nutrition Leader, Well Known in Capital, Often D. C. Visitor.

Many admirers of Dr. Mary Swartz Rose, pioneer in nutrition education, will be disappointed today when they learn that the tea which was to have been given her this afternoon by the District of Columbia Home Economics Association has been canceled on account of her illness.

Dr. Rose, who has attended every important conference on nutrition in Washington in the last decade, is also well known here as deputy director of the Bureau of Food Conservation during the World War. She also represents the United States at the League of Nations conference on nutrition. She has been selected as one of 20 American women who have achieved outstanding recognition in their profession and is now associate editor of the Journal of Nutirition and vice president of the American Institute of Nutrition.

The annual Christmas party of the Columbia Chapter, Women of the Moose, was held in Moose Hall last night. A feature of the entertainment was the reading of "The Yule Log," by Mrs. Emily Giles. Mrs. Emma Wagner was the Santa Claus and presented each member with a gift from the Christmas tree. Games were played under direction of Miss Margaret Mitchell, and a buffet supper followed. A special ceremony was also held in connection with the chapter's gift to the endowment fund of Mooseheart.

Labor Chief

For years students of public administration have been shouting to the housetops the need for fine young men who will make a career of Government service. In Robert C. Smith, yesterday chosen to succeed Robert Starr as personnel chief, the Department of Labor has just such a "fine young man."

Only 32, Smith has studied public affairs for more than a dozen years. Two of those years were as a graduate student of the University of Chicago under Civil Service Commissioner Leonard D. White. Smith had a hand in the reorganization of the Virginia, Texas and Chicago governments and for the last three years has supervised the field personnel work for Farm Credit.

The role of public administrator was not always Smith's goal in life. As a high-school student at Covington, Va., his birthplace, he looked forward to being a lawyer, while devoting most of his time to playing basket ball, football and baseball. Sports have remained his dominant outside interest. At Washington and Lee he played basket ball; now, 6 feet tall and weighing about 175 pounds, he is an avid golfer, bowler and swimmer.

It was after two years of prelaw work at Washington and Lee that Smith switched his interests to public affairs. He served for a time with the now defunct Virginia Bureau of Research and then in Chicago, where he studied at the University and worked for the efficiency management firm of E. R. Grifenhagen and associates on the Texas State and Chicago-Cook Country governmental reorganizations. At the University he impressed his professors as a good student and a hard worker, with a strong, inquisitive mind.

Early in 1934 Smith came to the Farm Credit Administration to take charge of the field personnel. He worked out and supervised the installation of the classification and compensation system for the corporations and land banks in the Farm Credit districts. He still cherishes the memory of a remark made by a Houston, Tex., banker after weeks of tedious wrangling over the classification details with Smith's staff.

"You ought to be a lawyer," remarked the banker. "You have such a judicious temperament."

Smith has two girls, one 7, the other 9. He is a prolific reader. He also keeps up on public administration and public law and follows Supreme Court decisions with the interest of a sports fan.

The "tapering off" of PWA's administrative staff, soon to begin, is to be made part of a general reorganization and reclassification preliminary to inclusion of the agency under the merit system.

Va. School Aide Asks State Fix 9-Month Term

Dr. Hall Also Recommends $720 Minimum Wage for All Teachers.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Dec. 29.—Dr. Sidney B. Hall, State superintendent of public instruction, recommended in his annual report to Gov. Peery today that the next General Assembly adopt a nine-month minimum school term and that a minimum teacher's salary of $720 be adopted "at the earliest possible moment."

Another major recommendation urged a four-year college training period for teachers before certification.

Other recommendations included:

That the primary efforts of the State be continued toward an improved instructional program;

That the State, through its proper agencies, continue to emphasize the general policy of maintaining elementary schools easily accessible to the smaller children, and that consolidation for high schools be emphasized.

That in connection with school buildings the State continue to insist upon the minimum requirements already established and approved by the State board of education.

Dr. Hall said in connection with the location of schools that as long as "efficient and economical units of instruction can be maintained for elementary school children, it should be done, but that consolidation should be considered wherever uneconomical and inefficient units are being maintained."

$3,105,000 Contract Let For Building in District

Award of a $3,105,000 contract for the construction of the Apex Building, between Constitution and Pennsylvania avenues, to McCloskey & Co., of Philadelphia, was announced here yesterday by the Treasury Department.

The contract calls for completion of the structure in 520 calendar days from the receipt of notice of the award of the contract.

Crew Abandons Ship.

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 29 (AP).—The Greek Steamer Mount Dirfys was abandoned today on Frying Pan Shoals off the North Carolina coast where she stranded last Saturday. The ship, loaded with iron ore, struck the shoal stern first and settled six feet in sand within a few hours. The Coast Guard Cutter Modoc took off the crew Sunday.

District Landmark Doomed If Street Measure Is Approved

Oldest Methodist Protestant Church on Continent May Fall Before March of Progress Against Traffic Congestion.

A Washington landmark—the oldest Methodist Protestant church in the North American continent—is being threatened with 'liquidation' on the approved wrecking manner because in some strange way it symbolizes traffic congestion.

It is in Georgetown, and though it is not quite as old as the cobblestones and the few remaining buildings that remind us of the past, the original structure stands to this day, although somewhat modified in form.

It is now called the Congress Street Church, at 1238 Thirty-first street, and the first cornerstone was laid June 2, 1829. The ceremony, performed by Potomac Lodge No. 5, was then described in the best post-Napoleonic style by the National Intelligencer. To quote in part:

"Our town was agreeably enlivened on Tuesday last by the ceremonies of laying the cornerstone of the Associated Methodist Church, the first foundation of the name in the District of Columbia.

The Masonic Fraternity of Potomac Lodge, No. 5, under the direction of William Hewitt, esquire, grand master of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, accompanied by other brethren from the neighboring lodges, officiated on the occasion."

The lot on which the Congress Street Church stands was purchased from Butler Cook, trustee for a Samuel Robertson, in April 1829. The church was built and dedicated the following year and the Rev. Wesley Wallace became first minister in charge.

Like all churches where membership is small and comparatively poor, the church soon found itself in straightened circumstances. Its indebtedness to the builders was finally settled when the trustees agreed to give the builders a deed of trust for $1,500.

By 1867 the membership had grown tremendously and the church was enlarged at a cost exceeding that of the original structure, the parsonage, and lecture room combined.

Today, according to the Rev. H. A. Kester, D. D., pastor, the Congress Street Church has a large and wide-awake congregation and a Bible class which, although only 10 years old, has an active membership of 211. Of that number, 72 are connected with the Police Department, with Maj. Brown holding his own end up as first vice president.

During the short decade of the existence of this class—known as the Harrison Bible Class—it has been addressed by 14 United States Senators and 134 lawmakers of the lower House. Many of these return for that purpose from time to time.

Dr. Kester had some very pungent remarks to say about the bill that would "liquidate" his church and his parsonage. He pointed out that the extension of Prospect street as now planned would be not only a suspicious deviation from the orthodox straight line, but would enhance the value of nearby property, giving it a longer frontage.

Taxpayers Benefit By Cincinnati Pool

Cincinnati, Dec. 29 (AP).—A buying pool of governmental agencies is saving Cincinnati taxpayers 1 per cent a year on their total tax levies, the Cincinnati Bureau of Governmental Research disclosed today.

Calvin Skinner, director of the privately endowed bureau which worked out the plan five years ago, estimated the co-operative purchasing of five governmental units had saved the taxpayers more than $1,000,000 so far.

The co-operative plan at present involves the pooling of orders by the purchasing agents of the county, city, board of education, the University of Cincinnati and the Public Library.

$10 Leaves Court Along With Youth Scolded in Thefts

A picture of penitence, a 13-year-old colored boy left Juvenile Court Christmas Eve after a scolding for thievery, and at about the same time $10 departed from two of the courtroom drawers, $4 of that sum belonging to Judge Fay Bentley.

Yesterday the youngster—perhaps penitent in earnest this time—was back in the toils of the law after Detective Thomas Nalley interrupted the freedom granted him after the scolding.

This time he will be charged with petty larceny, observed carefully while he is in court and very probably will not be turned loose for further holiday liberty.

Heroes Head Honor Guard In Inaugural

Eight From 6 Veterans' Organizations Will Form Unit.

Grayson Assigns More Members to Program Committee.

In keeping with the military theme for President Roosevelt's inauguration, outstanding war-time heroes—members of various national veterans' organizations—have been selected to provide the guard of honor for the court of honor in front of the White House January 20, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, general chairman of arrangements, announced last night.

Washington representatives of Nation-wide veterans' groups conferred with Admiral Grayson yesterday and 48 posts adjacent to the Presidential reviewing stand have been allotted to the honor guard.

Gen. Malin Craig, grand marshal of the inaugural parade, said eight veterans from each of six organizations would serve as the honor guards. Men whose distinguished war-time service numbered them among the Nation's heroes, will be selected for the honor positions and will be appropriately uniformed, Gen. Craig said.

They will take positions beside the Presidential reviewing stand when the President arrives from the Capitol Hill ceremonies and will remain on duty until the parade has passed.

New Members Added.

Men will be chosen from the following groups: The Legion of Honor, composed of men who either have won the Congressional Medal of Honor or Distinguished Service Cross; the American Legion, the Military Order of the World War, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Spanish-American War Veterans and the Disabled Veterans' Association.

Admiral Grayson also announced additional appointments to the program committee, of which J. Fred Essary is chairman. The new appointees were:

Ernest G. Walker, vice chairman; Felix Morley, Miss Ruth Finney, David Rankin Barbee, James D. Preston, Mrs. Isabel Griffin, Clifford K. Berryman, George Rothwell Brown, Miss Bertha Joseph, Lawrence D. Campbell, Henry Litchfield West, E. A. Merkle, Ulric Bell and Bascom Timmons.

With the placing of four road booths, through the co-operation of the American Automobile Association, at vantage points for motorists coming into the District, and a booth at the Union Station to accommodate the crowds expected to arrive on trains, every effort is being made to take care of the visitors arriving from all sections of the country for the inaugural, January 20, Edgar Morris, chairman of the housing and hospitality committee of the inaugural, reports.

To Place Booths.

Officials of the A. A. A. announce that the highway booths will be placed at Bradley Lane, Bethesda; at the Highway Bridge, at Rhode Island avenue northeast and at Bladensburg road northeast. The attendants in the booths will be in direct communication with the A. A. A., and the Housing Bureau so that no one coming into Washington will have any difficulty with rooming facilities.

Roy Miller, in charge of the Housing Bureau, reports that the Union Station booth and the highway booths will be open a few days before January 20. Mrs. Ann Embrey will be in charge of the Union Station booth.

Morris announced that rooms for visitors are being listed at Rooms 127 and 128, Willard Hotel, or by calling District 6040.

"Very few rooms are being listed and it is important that those who have rooms available at inaugural time list them immediately," he said.

Mother and Son Vanish On Way to City by Train

Police yesterday were asked by Kenneth Moore, baker, who lives at 1344 Columbia road, to aid in a search for his wife and 14-month-old son, Kenneth, jr., missing mysteriously since their departure from North Carolina to join him here.

Moore was to have been reunited with his wife and the infant at Union Station here when the train arrived Monday from Kenly, N. C. Mrs. Moore is 22. Authorities at Travelers Aid, as well as persons along the route have been unable to trace the woman and her son.

Inaugural Plaques Win Approval

Virginia Given Federal Funds For Highways

$3,735,699 Allocation Received for Year Beginning July 1.

By the Associated Press.

Virginia received a Federal road allocation of $3,735,699 yesterday for the fiscal year beginning next July 1 from a $200,000,000 highway and grade-crossing fund apportioned by Secretary Wallace.

The Virginia allocation included $2,328,369 for primary Federal-aid highways, $465,674 for secondary or feeder roads, and $941,656 for grade crossing elimination.

The largest of the State apportionments, $12,273,957, went to Texas.

The fund, provided by act of the last Congress, was apportioned on the basis of population, area and post road mileage. The act provided $125,000,000 for primary Federal-aid highways, $25,000,000 for secondary, or farm-to-market roads, and $50,000,000 for elimination of grade crossing hazards.

Boy Shoots at Target; Wounds Another in Leg

James J. Waters, jr., 15, of the 1600 block L street northeast, was shot through the leg yesterday while walking in the marshes of the Anacostia River near the foot of M street northeast.

Joseph McKenna, 15, of the 600 block Twelfth street northeast, told the police he fired the 22-caliber bullet which struck Waters. McKenna said he did not see the other boy while he was shooting at targets in the marsh.

Bandits Hold Up Store, Clean Cash Register

Miss Pearl Cole, manager of an ice cream parlor in the 800 block Upshur street northwest, was held up last night by two colored men, who robbed the cash register of an undetermined amount.

Miss Cole, who lives at 905 F street northeast, told the police she recognized the bandits as men who had been loitering near the ice cream parlor for the past several days. She said she had not checked the total of the night's receipts in the cash register before the hold-up.

Boy, 12, Breaks Leg.

Thomas McCauley, 12, son of Dr. Thomas McCauley, 137 D street southeast, suffered a fracture of leg last night when he ran into the side of an automobile driven by Howard A. Wageman, 115 D street southeast, in the alley in the rear of his home.

3 Killed, 8 Hurt In 3 Accidents Near Baltimore

Trucks Sideswipe, Wrecking One; Auto Piles Up, Two More Crash.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Dec. 29.—Five motor vehicles piled up in a series of three traffic accidents on the Belair road at Big Gunpowder Falls today, killing three men and injuring eight persons.

The dead, all residents of Baltimore, were:

James B. Rollison, 39, truck driver.

James Urban Bursick, 25, newspaper route carrier.

Edwin T. Romans, who was riding with Bursick.

Coroner Harry Probert said Rollison attempted to pass two other trucks and sideswiped a heavily loaded truck driven by Herbert Young, of Baltimore. Rollison's truck rolled over, crushing the driver.

The road became congested with vehicles and an hour and a half later, an automobile, carrying five Negroes, crashed into Young's truck. The automobile caught fire but the Negroes escaped being burned. They were hurt, however.

A short time later an automobile driven by John Kisnick, of Baltimore, crashed into a parked truck. Romans and Bursick were hurled through the windshield of Kisnick's car. They were dead on being received at a hospital.

7-Day Liquor Sale Opposed By Cochran

Missourian, Who Backed Repeal, Assails Change in D. C. Statute.

Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, who worked hard for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, yesterday joined District Commissioners in condemning the Dirksen measure to permit the sale of liquor in Washington on Sundays.

The author of the meaure, Representative Dirksen (Republican), Illinois, is still out of the city so that it is not known whether he will insist upon reintroducing the bill.

The commissioners yestreday stated that they will not send the bill to Congress and probably will disapprove it if asked for a report in view of the adverse testimony and argument at a public hearing on Monday.

"To permit the sale of liquor Sunday should be resented by all law-abiding citizens of the District," Cochran said in a letter addressed to the commissioners.

Silent Protest Cited.

"Absence of the representatives of big hotels and large distributors at the hearing can be accepted as a silent protest in opposition. I know this because I have talked with a number of them and failed to find one who looked with favor on the proposition.

"Anyone who feels that prohibition is a dead issue does not know what he is talking about. * * * Many drys, disgusted with prohibition, either assisted to bring about repeal or remained silent. Do not overlook that at least 65 per cent of the members of Congress, who legislate for the District of Columbia, represent the rural sections.

"Permit the sale of liquor on Sunday in the Nation's Capital and you will be placing a weapon in the hands of those who favor prohibition that will return to plague you.

Defeat Held Certain.

"If the direct question to pertmit the sale of liquor in Washington on Sunday is ever voted upon in Congress I will be the most disappointed man in the city if at least 95 per cent of the members do not reject the proposal.

"The surest way to prevent the return of prohibition in the District of Columbia is to provide for strict regulation and distribution, and, above all, proper protection for the youth of the city. Forfeiture of licenses and speedy prosecutoin for those who violate the laws and your regulations are essential.

"Without casting any reflection on my friend who introduced the bill in the Seventy-fourth Congress, I think it is proper to point out that he represents a district where as much whisky is manufactured as any Congressional district in the United States."

Ode to OTARD

by Ogden Nash

O IS FOR ORACLE

Two Tibetans met an Oracle,
A meeting potent and historical.
Tibetan A had filched a yak
From B, and wouldn't give it back.

The Oracle murmured in accents sage,
Dost wish to reach a happy old age?
Give him his yak and keep your own yak
And top your dinner with Otard cognac.

Ogden Nash

Otard enjoys a marked distinction in the three things which make a great brandy notable—taste, body, bouquet! Otard ★★★ Cognac—delicious with soda or straight.

IT'S A LONG, LONG LINE now forming at the Department of Vehicles at Pennsylvania avenue and John Marshall place, where thousands of motorists are seeking their 1937 tags. More than 6,000 sets of plates are being issued daily, and on this basis it is expected that some 10,000 motorists may be without tags on January 1. Those who have not already received forms by mail are advised to make inquiry at the Pennsylvania avenue office.

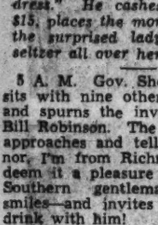
Filmfolk Hangouts.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 29.

Nearby resorts no sooner attract patronage of stars than they go commercial in large fashion. Of course, when this happens the star patronage fades sharply. Palm Springs, until last season, was purely a desert rest for weary actors. But new hotels sprang up, Los Angeles department stores established branches, scores of souvenir shops for tourists mushroomed along the main street, and the general quietude that once prevailed has changed to big city bustle. Eastern visitors who have no chance to set eyes on stars in Hollywood are flocking to the Springs, and if I may judge by complaints, rest and peace are now impossible.



SHIRLEY TEMPLE.

The same fate befell Malibu. Once a seaside mecca for stardom, outsiders crept in. Laguna Beach was another popular week-end resort, until it grew to such thriving townhood that filmites turn their tired feet toward other nooks. Arrowhead Lake and Big Bear are facing a similar exodus of screen star population.

Loss of movie patronage does not always deal a death blow to these villages and spas. Some of them, given the impetus of star auspices, prosper for years on follow-up publicity.

You will recall that Janet Gaynor was married to a Lydel Peck and their divorce was none too friendly. The other day a director, rehearsing her in a kiss scene, said "Just a little peck." "Do you have to describe it that way?" she asked.

Shirley Temple's mother showed me the new family trailer, in which they plan to take future jaunts as last summer's trip into the northwest. The trailer is palatial, but the thing that interested me was the material from which it is built. "Is it bullet-proof?" I asked. Mrs. Temple nodded. "But she doesn't need the kind of protection you are thinking," she said. "Shirley needs protection from kindness."

True. The child has occupied the warm spot in this country's heart that has been empty since Mary Pickford lost her title of "America's Sweetheart." People (women particularly) are so anxious to hug and kiss Shirley that they might wreck her health were she not carefully guarded.

So striking is the resemblance, especially the eyes, between Gladys George and former star Betty Compson that it has become a subject of spirited discussion. Betty, by the way, is still a beautiful woman, but she has reached the fateful mid-thirties at which screen stars almost inevitably slide into oblivion.

At any rate, fully a dozen localities who have seen "Valiant Is the Word for Carrie" have come to me with the identical thought, to wit: As they watched Miss George perform, they so lost themselves in her twinliness to Miss Compson that they actually felt as if they were watching the latter star.

Marlene Dietrich Proves Self Gallant and Heroic Trouper in Filming Hichen's 'The Garden of Allah'

Plays for Weeks on End in Oppressive Heat of Desert and Turns Out to Be the Gamest of the Company on Location; Some Afterthoughts on the Matter of the New Play at the National; Odd Bits of Gossip of the Theater and Its People This Yuletide.

THE new Technicolor version of Robert Hichen's "The Garden of Allah," which was unfurled at a preview screening yesterday for the benefit of the drama desks, was made under American conditions that closely approximated those which might have prevailed in its actual Sahara locale.

BELL.

Marlene Dietrich, the star, and her associate players struggled against the terrific temperatures of an American desert where frequently the Fahrenheit attains a mercurial altitude of 150 degrees. For days on end the company on location fought against complete physical collapse due to the enervating effects of climatic extremes. Through all of this, Frau Dietrich is reported to have been the gamest of the lot.

Perhaps she has become inured to the business of fighting the rigors of the world's various deserts successfully. It will be recalled that the first American-made film in which she appeared was "Morocco," at the end of which she removed her shoes and started the long trek across the sands to catch up with her beloved Gary Cooper. I mean this wholly in a dramatic sense. I do not recall the name of the character Mr. Cooper portrayed in this somewhat remote production.

As a persistent advocate of the value of color to the screen, I cannot for the life of me understand why it is not universally adopted as the standard process of film-making instead of the present drab black and whites, unless the matter of cost is the dominant factor.

There was a time when color film cost approximately 50 per cent more than black and white. That excessive tariff since has been reduced by about half and color photography has been immeasurably improved.

There ought to come a time before long when a balance could be reached that would enable the consistent use of color on the silver sheet. It certainly belongs there as a further evidence of the cinema's capacity for achieving a complete realism.

"The Garden of Allah" will be coming along soon to a Loew screen. It will be well worth your time to see it.

In contemplation of "The Two Mrs. Carrolls," current at the National, 24 hours after its American premiere, one feels constrained to believe that Mrs. Marguerite Veiller, the author, might well enlist the services of her distinguished playwright-husband, Bayard Veiller, in whipping the piece into shape.

This thought quite naturally harks back to the electric business of "Within the Law," first played by Jane Cowl and then by Helen Ware. In this subject, Veiller contrived a drama that never failed to hold interest and never let down. Not quite so much can be said for Mrs. Veiller and "The Two Mrs. Carrolls." The present play begins in lethargic fashion and needs a large amount of play-carpentering before it will be as able a bit of dramaturgy as its fundamental virtues warrant. I presume the tinkering already has set in, but, even so, it has a long way to go.

It is a little surprising to her many admirers in Washington that Frances Starr, one of the American theater's most distinguished actresses, should be so subordinated in the cast. She does beautifully, of course, all that is assigned her, but it is not enough.

Burton Holmes will be coming along shortly—that is to say during January and February—in a series of five of his engaging travelogues. This year he will be presented under the auspices of the Community Center Department in Roosevelt High School Auditorium on five Wednesday evenings at 8:15 o'clock.

The topics chosen for this season's travel talks are "England, Wales and Scotland," "Troubled Spain," "Switzerland," "All Over France" and "New and Old Japan."

As the most suave and most polished of the rostrum's lecturers, Mr. Holmes always is assured of large and appreciative audiences in the National Capital.

It is a growing fear of this department's that the first thing we know Rudy Vallee will discontinue his annual visit to the stage of Loew's Capitol, or any other Washington theater. For why? For because every time he comes here he is laid low by a variety of cold weather complaints that keep him practically on the sick list. Last year this column missed a pleasant interview with him because he was indisposed and, we suspected, would rather not have been annoyed, and this year again he is all cluttered up with a cold and is going to fly to Florida to see what that will do for him after closing the current engagement at the Capitol tomorrow night.

"Sing Me a Love Song," Warner Brothers' gay musical comedy with an all-star cast, will be the attraction at the Earle Theater the second week of the New Year. When I say "All-star cast," I mean practically that—James Melton, one of the best of the contemporary vocalists; Patricia Ellis, one of the loveliest of the ditto blondes; Hugh Herbert, ZaSu Pitts, Allen Jenkins, Nat Pendleton, Ann Sheridan, Walter Catlett and Hobart Cavanaugh.

Just what more would you want for fun and frolic?

They tell me on the "Q. T." that Hugh Herbert runs away with the comedy honors in this one, despite the competition of ZaSu Pitts, Jenkins, Pendleton and Catlett. That would be just like him.

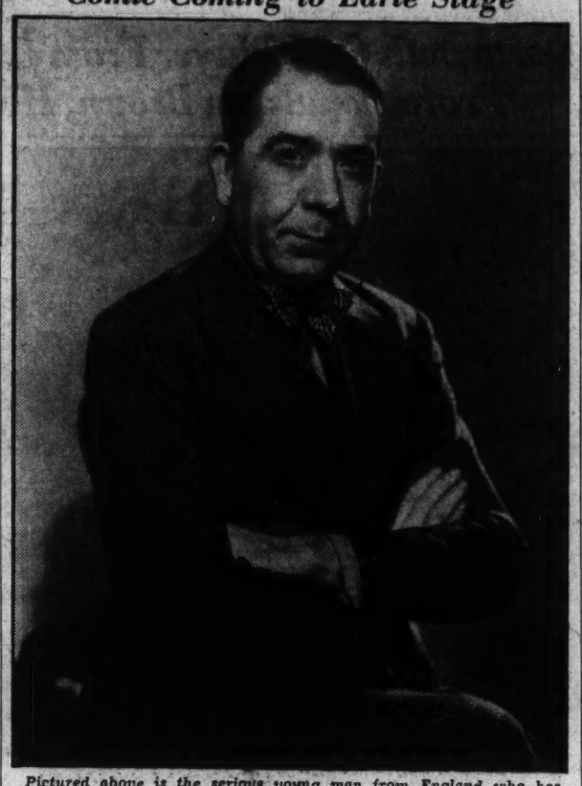
Comic Coming to Earle Stage



Pictured above is the serious young man from England who has made millions laugh with the grotesque accents of his Cockney dialect. The name would be Herbert Mundin and he would be coming along soon to the Earle Theater stage to headline the vaudeville bill. One suspects that this talented actor is very funny in person, as well as on the screen.

14 Are Sentenced In Stock Fraud

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard today sentenced 14 defendants convicted sentenced 14 defendants convicted sale of stock of Dayon Industries, Inc., to terms ranging from one to seven years in Federal penitentiaries.

Clement H. Congdon, former editor and publisher of the Philadelphia Transcript, was sentenced to five years.

Congdon, a principal defendant, was accused of promoting the stock through the National Investment Transcript, Inc., a corporate defendant which Judge Goddard fined $10,000 for conspiracy and one dollar each on 13 mail fraud counts of the indictment.

The Government charged that investors lost $5,000,000 in Rayon Industries, Inc., stock.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West

North and South were not using the two-way three bid and, that being so, the four heart bid was probably the best at South's command. His partner had already passed so there was small danger of missing a biddable slam, and, even with his good honor strength, South feared an adverse spade suit.

West opened his singleton spade King; dummy's Ace won, while East signaled with the seven-spot. Declarer saw that it was hopeless to lead up to his club holding, since one lead from dummy would be no better than none at all. Even

With East opening the diamond would not go up at the first play, and he could not hope to re-enter dummy for the necessary second finesse. Therefore, rather than disclose the situation, he decided that his best chance lay in help from the opponents. As it happened, he was right.

He led a heart from dummy and played the Jack. West won with the Ace, and foolishly did just what the declarer wanted. Obviously, he could not risk a diamond lead from his King, and instead of making the perfectly safe return of a trump, he led the deuce of clubs. Dummy played low, and East could have redeemed the error by failing to put up his Ace, but he could hardly be blamed for not reading the situation as it actually was. His partner's lead of the deuce strongly indicated an honor in the suit, and if that were true it might be fatal to put on the eight-spot.

Obviously, after the club Ace was out of the way, declarer had to concede only the diamond, and thus made his contract. Had West exited properly in the one safe suit—trumps—declarer inevitably would have had to lose two clubs and one diamond in addition to the trump Ace.

Bred to Run

By Walter Haight

SYNOPSIS.

A colt is foaled on the Ridgeway Farm. He is given much advice by his mother as he learns to munch grass and test his wobbly legs. The Ridgeways are forced to dispose of their horses at auction and the colt is "thrown in for good measure" when his mother, Battleship Girl, is sold to the Witmore Farm. Dorothy Holbrook's auto has a flat tire near the fence and she sees the colt frolicking. Later she persuades her father to buy him, identifying the colt by a white ring around his leg. Taken to Holbrook Manor, the colt grows like a weed. He and "Miss Dorothy," as he calls his owner, become fast friends. The colt meets Trainer Jensen and is given early racing education. Named "Flat Tire," he starts his racing career and loses his rider at the break.

CHAPTER SIX.

I Have My Day.

Jockey Allison didn't fall off the next time I went to the post. I wish he had.

While we were in the stall in the paddock a tall flush-faced man wearing a derby and carrying a cane stopped by.

"Nice looking black colt you've got there, Jensen," he said eyeing me up and down. "I'm told he works good. What do you think of his chances?"

"Only been out once," replied Trainer Jensen. "Tossed the boy that time. He's a little green but you might have a little bet on him. The company ain't much, you know."

The tall man with the derby and cane moved slowly to the next stall. I heard Trainer Jensen mutter "I never liked that guy, anyway" or words to that effect under his breath.

Jockey Allison soon appeared from the jockey's room. He stood beside Trainer Jensen and the pair of them buzzed to each other for a while and then stood around and watched the crowd.

My nostrils told me that the Cigar Man was arriving. He came around the corner of the stall acompanied by his usual weedy odor.

The Cigar Man and Trainer Jensen conversed in low mumbling tones. Some of the racegoers crowded around the iron screening and along the elevated walk. I took some of the conversations to mean that Flat Tire was being "sent," or would be a hard horse to beat.

Several times I noticed men and women duck out of the crowd and, after looking at their programs, hurry off, apparently head for the betting ring.

Finally Trainer Jensen turned to Jockey Allison and whispered, "this is the one we may use. Now remember what I told you. Don't make any mistakes."

I was a little jumpy when we paraded to the post and Allison jogged me up beside the outrider (the fellow who leads the parade) and he took me by the bridle.

I had the outside post position. I remember that I heard Trainer Jensen tell Jock Allison, "You're on the outside of the field. That makes it better." That puzzled me at the time but I saw the light, so to speak, later.

I didn't know what Jockey Allison's plans were but I had my race mapped out. I made up my mind to put on some extra speed at the start, hoping to get clear so that Allison could swing me in toward the rail where we could "save ground."

When the starting bell came, I sprang forward.

Jockey Allison did not "come with me," if you know what I mean. If a jockey lets his weight fall back on the horse at the start, he naturally pulls on the reins. Incidentally, I had riders later who wrapped one hand in my mane in order that their bodies would move with mine at the start.

I bounded a couple of times but the grip slowed me. At the moment I thought it accidental but Allison did not give me my head until we were far back and on the outside. Despite my inexperience, I was fighting mad. I wanted to run. I still burn every time I think of it.

I tried my best but Allison seemed determined that I go wide. As to our position at the finish I can only say that we were still far back and on the outside.

I felt disgraced and I must confess that when Allison pulled me up after the finish I stopped abruptly, hoping that I would toss him over my head. He must have been a pretty fair rider at that, I didn't even feel his weight lighten on the stirrups.

"We'll use him, all right. Nice work, Allison," said Trainer Jensen when Joe was taking my head as we returned to the judges' stand.

I recognized the Cigar Man standing with his chin against the fence as Joe led me away. The Cigar Man was smiling. His cigar was held at such an abrupt angle that it looked as if it were burning his eyebrow.

Later, I laughed too. But at this time, my mind was in a whirl. Why wasn't I allowed to run? Why did Jockey Allison jerk me up at the start? So I was to be used. For what?

I asked Johnny's Girl about it the next day when Foreman Donovan was examining her hoof outside my stall.

"Wasn't your day," said the filly, and Donovan led her away before she could go into detail.

I suspected my day had arrived. It was a week later.

Trainer Jensen gave me much special attention at the morning workout. Jockey Allison was in the saddle instead of Joe. The Cigar Man was there. I knew it must be a special occasion. I had never seen the Cigar Man at the track or around the stables before noon.

The Cigar Man did not come into the paddock. Trainer Jensen seemed to be taking on an unconcerned air. A fellow (I learned he was a turfwriter) stopped and asked, "Do you like that thing of yours today?"

"We're always doing our best," replied Jensen, "I don't think this one is much."

The turfwriter moved on to the next stall and I heard him ask the same question.

When we came to the odds-board on the way to the post, I heard one of the jockeys who was yanking on a frisky colt say, "Allison, you just dropped from fifteen to five."

Allison grunted some answer.

When we were off this time we WERE off. I had the rail position. I took a leap at the bell and Allison was right with me. He was throwing his arms and rocking his body in unison with my strides.

We were out in front.

I ran and ran. What went on behind me I do not know. At one time early in the stretch I could hardly hear the hoofs of the other horses. Allison began to draw in on the reins at the edge of the mutuel board and I bounded past the black line.

Flat Tire, a winner!

Proudly I came back to the judges' stand. Allison took me over on the other side this time—in the winner's circle, I learned later. Trainer Jensen was there and he was smiling. Joe was laughing as he slapped

Washington U. Pins Hopes On 4 Speedy Sophomore Backs

By the Associated Press.

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 29.—Tapering off their preparations for the intersectional football battle in the Rose Bowl New Year's Day, the Pittsburgh and Washington squads went through lengthy signal drills today on slippery fields.

The Golden Panthers held their usual double workout at their San Bernardino hide-out, from which little information seeps. Coach Jimmy Phelan sent his Washington Huskies through a stiff session here.

Changing his plans, Jock Sutherland, Pittsburgh's big chief, decided to move the squad to Pasadena late tomorrow, and use the Rose Bowl for a final workout Thursday.

May Start Sophs.

Prospects of a duel of crackerjack ball carriers loomed as the day of the game drew near. Phelan Phelan may start a backfield of Chuck Newton at quarterback, Jimmy Johnston at left half and Merle Miller at full, all of which are sophomores, and the capable veteran Jimmy Cain at the right half post.

This would mean that he would be prepared to rush in his firewagon brigade of Byron Haines, Ed Nowogroski, Elmer Logg and Fritz Wzskowitz, or leave Cain in to complete the scoring ensemble, if the Huskies encountered heavy going.

Of the group, Haines and Cain were the biggest ground gainers this year, the former averaging 3.92 yards per try and Cain 4 yards even, for a combined yardage of 771 yards for the two.

Pitt's challenge to the Washington attack lies in young Marshall Goldberg, 18-year-old sophomare star; Bobby La Rue, veteran half, a capable blocker; three crashing fullbacks, Bill Stapulis, Frank Patrick and Arnold Greene, all veterans, and the two Johns, Chickerneo and Michelosen, to round out the backfield delegation.

Watch Goldberg!

Goldberg, a retiring, highly regarded teammate, ran up 861 yards in 151 tries with the ball this fall for a 5.7 average.

Pitt backers, warning Coast observers that the Panthers have a sharp overhead attack, reminded that in the Nebraska game, the Huskers were leading by a touchdown two minutes before the end of the first quarter. When the half came, Pitt had scored twice, and both were directly on passes. They didn't bother to throw the ball any more in the game, and won, 19 to 6.

Post-Season Grid Tilts Opposed

Objections to All-Star and "Bowl Contests" Voiced by Leaders.

Coaches Asked to Stop Predicting Outcome of College Games.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 29.—The National Collegiate Athletic Association went on record today in opposition to all post-season football games and all football contests pitting amateurs against professionals.

The N. C. A. A.'s action came in adopting a report offered by a special committee appointed a year ago to investigate intercollegiate athletics. Prof. Z. G. Clevenger, of the University of Indiana, was chairman of the committee. The other members were Prof. Philip O. Badger, of New York University, and Prof. H. H. King, of Kansas State.

Cites Objections.

The committee report cited objections specifically to the so-called "bowl games" as well as to such recent innovations as the all-star games pitting all-star college players against professionals.

The committee likewise deplored the growth of gambling in football circles and recommended that coaches and all others associated with college sports refrain from making public statements on, or predictions of the outcome of, college games.

At the same time the committee "viewed with apprehension, the tendency in some quarters for members of intercollegiate sports staffs to participate in commercial broadcasts in which the good names of the colleges and college sports are traded upon for the sales promotion of products."

It cited this as one more evidence of the "intrusion of outside influence and activities in matters which are entirely the concern of the colleges."

The convention approved the sale of broadcasting rights of football games, a matter which came into prominence within the last few years when Western universities sold their games to commercial sponsors and the move was taken up in the East by Yale last fall.

Drinking at college athletic events was deplored as "detrimental to the best interests" of college athletics."

Rules Satisfactory.

The special committee report came after the convention had heard Walter R. Okeson, of Lehigh, chairman of the national football rules committee, declare the rules had been "very satisfactory" during 1936 and discuss at considerable length the moot point of forward pass interference.

Okeson said the committee would give every consideration to suggested changes in the code at its meeting later this winter, but indicated few alterations were necessary or likely.

The convention decided that the 1937 convention would be held elsewhere than in New York. The site will be determined by a mail vote of the membership. The custom is to hold the convention four successive years in New York and then shift it to some other city for one year.

John L. Griffith, commissioner of the Western Conference, was re-elected president and Dean Frank Nicolson, of Wesleyan University, again was chosen secretary-treasurer.

Collegiate Group Gives Brundage Verbal Bouquets

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Avery Brundage, whose leadership of the American Olympic committee has been sharply criticized in some quarters, drew verbal bouquets from the National Collegiate Athletic Association today.

The N. C. A. A. adopted a resolution "recognizing the outstanding qualities of resourcefulness and leadership displayed" by Brundage as head of the American Olympic committee and "its admiration and respect for him as a man and as an Olympic officer."

The resolution was drawn up and submitted by Dr. Joseph E Raycroft, of Princeton; Romeyn Berry, of Cornell, and William J Bingham, of Harvard.

N. C. A. A. Takes Hand In Amateur Baseball

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—The National Collegiate Athletic Association adopted a resolution at its convention today under which it will join hands with the U. S. A. Baseball Congress in governing amateur baseball throughout the country.

The action paves the way for the organizations to act on uniform rules for the amateur game and to co-operate in selection of the annual "All-American team" and the quadrennial Olympic baseball team.

Jock McLean Turns Pro.

Glasgow, Scotland, Dec. 29 (AP).—Jock McLean, star of the 1936 British Walker Cup team and runner-up to Johnny Fischer, of Cincinnati in the United States amateur golf championship, became a professional today. He signed a contract as pro with the Buchanan Castle Club near Glasgow.

Promoter Dies.

Belmar, N. J., Dec. 29 (AP).—Frank Mihlon, sr., sports promoter and formerly part owner of the Newark Velodrome, dropped dead of heart disease today at his home. He was 60.

Dartmouth Grid Player From Capital Assails 'Professionals' on Brown, Holy Cross Elevens

By John R. Vosburgh.

Into the verbal scrimmage now current among football coaches and educators on the question of "professionalism," yesterday stepped chunky Joe Kiernan, the Washington boy, who for three years has been a backfield mainstay at Dartmouth.

Pulling no punches, the stocky fullback forcefully assailed the "hiring" of college athletes, as an assemblage of 125, gathered at the Harrington Hotel for the annual Dartmouth alumni luncheon meeting, watched him tackle the controversial subject as though it were a Cornell halfback.

"We don't want Dartmouth 'hiring' athletes," he exclaimed. "When I was a freshman, three years ago, a Dartmouth alumnus said we'd never have teams until we began hiring players. I've never forgotten it. It isn't true."

Speaking of Dartmouth's game with Holy Cross this year, which the Big Green lost, 7-0, Kiernan said, "I sure think it was pretty good the way the boys stood up against those professional players. Even though we lost, we made them look pretty poor," he added, laughing.

Holy Cross won on an intercepted pass. Kiernan was unable to play because of a rather serious injury.

"Professional" players, Kiernan contended, do not necessarily make for good teams. "We played the pugs from Brown," he said, "and they're not smart. Boys thrown to-

Forward Pass Rule Will Stand

Coaches Oppose Change in Interference at Annual Meeting.

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 29.—Agitation for a change in the forward pass interference rule, especially with the idea of reducing the drastic character of goal-line penalties, fizzled out almost completely today, so far as the American Football Coaches Association is concerned.

After scrimmaging through the first half of their two-day annual meeting, listening to quick oratorical thrusts off tackle, and viewing motion picture evidence, the majority of college coaches made it clear they favor no change in the existing rules, even though many feel the interpretation by gridiron officials is not all that it should be.

"Barring unforeseen developments or an attempt to bring the issue up on the floor tomorrow, I do not think there is any real sentiment for changing the present rule defining pass interference," declared Lou Little of Columbia, chairman of the coaches' rules committee.

Rule Is Explicit.

"Many coaches feel that officials should strive for more uniform and consistent interpretation of the rule," Little added.

"In some cases it is felt the defense is given less benefit of the doubt than the offense. The rule is explicit, however, and no suggestion for a change has been made upon which there is any apparent agreement."

Little's committee, except for a few possible suggestions for rules clarification, will recommend a "status quo" for 1937. The annual report of Walter Okeson, of Lehigh, chairman of the National Collegia A. A. rules committee, likewise forecast no rules shakeup, in general, or any likelihood of change in the passing regulations, in particular.

Wynne Assails Officials.

Obvious differences of opinion on the pass interference rule between coaches and officials reached the acrimonious stage only once during the day's sessions. It involved a short passage of verbal arms between Chet Wynne, former Notre Dame fullback who now is head coach at Kentucky, and Austen Lake, Boston sports writer and official.

Wynne charged some officials "make up their minds about the outcome of a game before they even go on the field and, as a consequence, take the easy way out in making hairline decisions." He added: "Officials are only human but that's the trouble."

Lake, who had previously argued against changing the pass rule, quickly responded to Wynne's challenge. Characterizing the Kentucky coach's statement as "unmitigated hooey," Lake said:

"No official, within my knowledge, ever has gone into a game prejudiced or even concerned with the outcome. I should say in 100 cases out of 100 an official has no concern except to call the play as he sees it. As often as not he doesn't even know which team he has called a penalty against. An official has no friends on or off the field and he knows it."

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

(Ed. note—This column was written after early reports stated definitely that the Albany franchise had been sold. And, times being what they are, it's a heap easier to write this editor's note than to conjure another topic.)

So Joe Cambria took the $60,000 and sold his Albany baseball franchise to the New York Giants. It was hardly a heart-breaking decision for Cambria to make, seein' as how he bought the Albany club four years ago at the modest price tag of $7,500.

POVICH.

But the entire deal wherein the Albany team passes into possession of the Giants would appear to be a striking commentary on what the ordinary businessman must surely believe are the screwy economics of baseball.

That Cambria was able to make a 700 per cent profit on the sale of a ball team that finished in seventh place in the International League last season is remarkable alone for the fact that the Giants will transfer the franchise to Jersey City.

It was the Jersey City franchise that Cambria acquired for Albany a few years ago. At the time, the Jersey City club was going begging, with the International League frantically searching for some owner to take it at virtually its own price.

Now the Giants pay $60,000 for a franchise to take back to Jersey City in the very face of the fact that when the Jersey City club reached the end of its rope in the International League four years ago it had accumulated an indebtedness of $85,000.

But the Giants are not concerned with making the Jersey City club pay in Jersey City. Manager Bill Terry and Owner Horace Stoneham realize that the Giants need a convenient class AA farm where young talent may be seasoned and developed. The Giants, in fact and despite their pennant triumph in the National League in 1936, were living in something of a fool's paradise. The team was literally coming apart at the seams due to the age of its players, and the Greenwood club in the Class C Cotton States League constituted the Giants' only source of direct supply of young talent.

The sale of the Albany franchise is no great blow to the Washington club, which in its working agreement with Cambria, had first call on the Albany players. In four years, Albany had not developed a single star for the Nats. The one regular Cambria sent up to the Washington team was Jake Powell, who had been Washington property.

Albany's greatest asset to the Washington team was its convenience as an outlet for Washington players who were being returned to the minors for a spell. Albany was never a serious pennant contender itself, but Washington rookies sent to the team gained the invaluable experience of playing against legitimate Class AA teams.

The alliance between the Washington and Albany clubs was always a strange affair. No contract marked the arrangement whereby the Nats were given first call to any Albany player Cambria's team might happen to develop. Cambria and Clark Griffith simply had an understanding whereby the affiliation of the two clubs would benefit both.

The chief consideration received by Cambria in the bargain was Griffith's friendly advice and sage counsel. Whenever Griffith deemed an Albany player worth a certain amount, he would set the price, pay in cash and Cambria would not haggle. If Griffith chose to take a ball player on trial, a privilege for which any other ball club would have to pay, then that, too, was all right with Cambria.

Because in the 67-year-old owner of the Washington club, Cambria recognized a valuable friend. Griffith, wise in the ways of organized baseball and high in its councils, was able to save the Albany owner who was unschooled in the game, many a headache. On occasion he shielded Cambria from the official wrath of Commissioner Landis.

Cambria more than once was called on the official carpet for irregular procedure in signing and releasing ball players. Only the intervention of Griffith saved him from severe penalties. Griffith was free and friendly with his advice; Cambria needed it and appreciated it, and thus it was that their respective word was the bond that permitted the two clubs to work together sans the services of a notary public.

A. Ritzenberg Wins in U. S. Net Event

Middle Atlantic Junior Champ Advances as Cowan Loses.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 29.—Carried to three sets for the second time in two days, Allie Ritzenberg, of Washington, D. C., No. 7 seeded player, went on to gain the fourth round of the National Junior Indoor Tennis championships here today. The slim Capital youth eliminated Arthur C. Nielsen, jr., of Winnetka, Ill., 7—5, 4—6, 6—1, at the Seventh Regiment Armory.

At the same time, Maurice Cowan, of Washington, was bowing to William Umstaedter, of Millburn, N. J., 6—4, 6—4 in the third round of the National Boys event. The 13-year-old District of Columbia boy also lost in the doubles, paired with John L. Lincoln, of Bethesda, Md.

In a first round match, Donald Fairbairn, of Scarsdale, N. Y., and William J. Walker, of Woodcliff, N. J., eliminated the Washington team, 3—6, 6—1, 6—4. Ritzenberg is still a survivor in the Junior doubles, paired with Davie Johnsen, of Washington.

Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, and his Kenyon College (Ohio) teammate, Morey Lewis, of Texarkana, Tex., top-ranking players in the tourney, gained the fourth round easily.

McNeill defeated Bernard Jacoby, of New York City, 6—2, 6—2, and Lewis advanced on 6—3, 6—3 victory over John Potts Wendell, of Pottstown, Pa.

South Too Strong For Bowl—Pinckert

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 29.—Ernie Pinckert, former star halfback for Southern California, told interviewers today he believed "the South's fine record on the coast had a lot to do with Pitt getting the Rose Bowl bid."

Pinckert is en route to California to attend the Coast game.

"My guess is that authorities figured L. S. U., the logical choice, might be too strong and they're getting pretty sick of taking it on the chin," Pinckert said. "However, another factor that entered into it was fear that L. S. U. would have refused the bid because some New Orleans pressure might have forced them to play in the sugar bowl."

Pittsburgh Promoter Trying Basketball on Ice

Pittsburgh, Dec. 29 (AP).—John P. Harris, Pittsburgh sports promoter, announced tonight a new winter program — basketball on ice.

He said the first basketball game on Duquesne Garden's hockey rink will be played January 12, and others will be played in a league he is organizing.

Fate of Nats' Farm Hangs In Balance

"No Sale as Yet," Says Club Owner; Giants Announce Deal.

$60,000 Reported as Price; Jersey City Would Get Club.

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—The New York Giants announced today that the deal whereby they would purchase the Albany Club of the International League was ready for signing, but Joe Cambria, who owns the outfit, wasn't so sure. Albany has been a "farm" for the Washington Senators.

The Giants said an agreement had been reached with Cambria, that papers would be signed tomorrow, and that the club would be transferred to Jersey City next season, with Travis Jackson, veteran third baseman, as manager if he wants the job.

Cambria, at his Baltimore home, said that "there has been no sale of the Albany Club as yet," that he had not been notified of the acceptance by the Giants of his offer, and that he had not planned to do any signing tomorrow. He intimated there would have to be further negotiations.

Terms Reported Satisfactory.

The word was that Frank Shaugnessy, president of the International League, had been informed that the Giant terms, approximately $60,000 in cash, were satisfactory to Cambria.

The Giants planned to move the franchise to the new Roosevelt Stadium (seating capacity 32,500) in Jersey City, a former franchise-holder in the league.

The sale of Albany to the Giants has long been rumored. The Giants want the class AA outfit as the second farm in the chain they are constructing. They also have another farm—Greenwood, Miss., in the cotton States League.

Liens Held Up Sale.

Previously the Albany sale had been held up because of territorial liens against the old Jersey City International League Club. Those debts, totaling around $85,000, were said to have been settled for something like $18,500, with the New York Yankees as principal creditors.

In denying that the deal had been consummated, Cambria said any progress in the negotiations "must come from the New York end.

"I have not sold the Albany club," he said earlier in the day, "and as long as I am the owner, the club will remain in Albany."

Cambria Will Not Sell, Griffith Believes.

Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington club, last night expressed the belief that Joe Cambria would not sell the Albany franchise to the New York Giants. Griffith had been in telephonic communication with the Albany owner.

"Cambria told me he wanted to retain the Albany team," Griffith said, "and I believe he will."

Griffith, who for four years has had a working agreement with Cambria that gives the Nats first call on Albany players, doubted that the Washington club would suffer greatly in the loss of Albany as a farm.

"We still have the Chatanooga club in the Southern Association, which I feel is as fast a league as the International," said Griffith, "and we have working agreements also with Sanford in the Florida State League; Jacksonville, in the Florida-Georgia League; the Americus, Ga., club, and Cambria's Trenton team in the N. Y.-Pa. league."

Gevinson's Handlers Pleased, Plan Bigger Bouts for Future

Jewish Boxer To Vacation In Florida

Only 'Known' Scrappers Lined Up for Clever Southpaw Battler.

By Bill McCormick.

Having demonstrated—to the satisfaction of his own handlers, at least—that he is ready for the best the featherweight division has to offer, Lou Gevinson will start after better, if not bigger, ring game.

The little Jewish southpaw, who defeated the veteran Joe Temes in his third professional fight at Turner's Arena last Monday night, will take a short vacation in Florida, then return to start training for a bout to be held here in the first or second week of February.

In the face of challenges from many local featherweights, Gevinson's handlers have decided that they would rather accept only nationally-known names in an effort to build their charge up to a really big shot when the outdoor season opens. Doug Swetnam and Bobby Dechter, very capable preliminary boys are among those who have flung challenges at the former District amateur featherweight titleholder.

He Has Nothing to Gain.

"We feel that there is nothing to be gained fighting this type of boy," Lou's handlers say. "If the public demands such contests, we will take them as we feel Lou is ready for any featherweight in the world. Before accepting any of these challengers, however, we must insist that they beat Temes, to demonstrate that they will make a real fight with Gevinson."

Unless one of the local challengers is able to qualify by defeating the rugged little Greek that was hampered out of a decision by Gevinson, Lou's next opponent will be one with a nationally known name.

"Gevinson's manager already has said he would like to fight Joe Dougherty, who has made several pleasing fights here." Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn said yesterday. "Joe will be a pretty tough assignment for Lou in his fourth professional assignment, but it that's what they want, that's what they'll get, if we can sign Dougherty."

Among others under consideration are Frankie Covelli, Pete DeGrasse, Lloyd Pine and Frankie Wolfram.

Many experienced observers predicted that Gevinson would never go very far in the professional game, even following his decisive victory over Temes, whom he spotted much experience.

A Two-Fisted Battler.

While even those most discouraged at Gevinson's showing admitted the southpaw had great natural ability and the largest supply of two-fisted punching ability since Joe Louis, those who follow such matters closely pointed out many weaknesses in Lou's form which, they claim, will make him easy pickings for any smart fighter.

First of all, point out the critics, Gevinson literally semaphores his intentions of launching a punch by the manner in which he cocks his elbows before letting loose. Others noted that Lou carried his right hand way too low, making him as easy to hit with a left as Louis is to smear with a right. As proof of this weakness, Temes repeatedly smacked Gevinson with left hooks throughout their encounter.

Others think Gevinson is off-balance when he leads with his right and that he wasted much strength in clumsy attempts to maul Temes at close quarters.

None, however, has yet risen to deny Gevinson's punching prowess, strength, stamina and ability to take a punch.

Coach Bernie Bierman At Minn. Fete Tonight

Minnesota's famous football coach, Bernie Bierman, arrives in Washington today by airplane to attend the annual football banquet of the university's Alumni Association in Washington, to be held at the Press Club tonight in conjunction with the Minnesota and South Dakota State societies.

A gathering of 300 is expected to attend the function, which begins at 7:30 p. m. Senator Guy Harris, Minnesota's "60-day Senator," and Representative Usher J. Burdick, former Minnesota star, will be among those present. President Johnny McGovern of the Minnesota Alumni Association will preside.

Ossie Solem, coach of the University of Iowa, and Clark Shaughnessy, coach of University of Chicago, will possibly accompany Bierman.

Champ Cowley Wins In "Y" Handball Event

Joe Cowley, defending champion, advanced to the semifinals of the annual Central Y. M. C. A. handball championships yesterday on the "Y" courts, defeating Artie Wondrack, former Central High star athlete, 21-16, 21-9. He will play Lionel Moore tonight at 8:30, while Jack Schwartz, former champion, will meet Wallace Winkler in the other semifinal.

The finals will be played at 2:30 p. m. New Year's Day.

Singles.

Quarterfinals—Jack Schwartz defeated Frank Millo, 21—7, 21—16; Wallace Winkler defeated Frank Adams, 21—11, 21—9; Lionel Moore defeated John Payne, 21—17, 21—21, 21—14; Joe Cowley defeated Artie Wondrack, 21—16, 21—9.

Ambers Gains Knockout Over Jacobs in Seventh

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 29 (AP).—Lou Ambers, lightweight champion, scored a seven-round technical knockout over Charley (Stumpy) Jacobs, Richmond, Va., lightweight, here tonight. Ambers' title was not at stake.

Ambers swarmed all over Jacobs from the start and softened up his adversary with a two-fisted attack which brought blood from Jacobs' nose as early as the second round.

Umpires Get Raise In National League

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 29.—Salaries of all 12 National League umpires for 1937 have been raised and most of them already have signed, Ford Frick, league president, revealed today.

Frick's attention was called to a recent announcement by Will Harridge, American League president, that salaries of all umpires in that league, had been raised. He was asked whether the National League would follow suit.

"We sent 1937 contracts to our umpires about 10 days ago," he replied, "and each man on the staff received an increase. I don't know for sure but I think we sent out our contracts before the American League did.

"We have heard from about two-thirds of them and all were satisfied with salary terms."

Frick declined to say which members of the umpiring staff had returned their contracts.

St. John's, With Rally, Halts Alumni, 17-15

St. John's High staged a game last-minute rally yesterday to hand the powerful St. John's Alumni team a 17-15 defeat on the school court. It was the third straight win of the undergrads over the alumni.

The grads had a 15-11 lead with a few minutes to play when Jimmy Giebel, Joe Gallagher and Rephokf each came through with a basket to make it 17-15.

Piers, Bad Belgian, Wrestles at Arena

Wrestling will return to Washington next January 7 with Henri Piers, the Belgian bogey-man, playing a leading role. Henri will meet either Gino Garibaldi or Cliff Olsen in a fetaure at Turner's Arena.

Piers has won every one of at least 20 matches he has been through in Washington, with the exception of a few draws. He has established himself as somewhat of a local hero by his habit of mixing with the customers at the ringside just as soon as he has finished the scheduled stint of grunting and groaning.

Garibaldi, one of the roughest matmen in the business, always has been a prime favorite with the thrill-seekers hereabouts. Olsen, an alternate opponent for Piers, is recognized on this circuit as champion because Yvon Robert broke his leg while working against Cliff here recently.

O'Donnell's Restaurant Loses to Methodist

Marvin Methodists won an exciting game last night at Hine Junior High School from O'Donnell's Restaurant by a score of 32 to 25, in an American League basketball contest of the Southeast Center. Evans for Marvin and Julian for O'Donnell's were the stars.

Turkey Shoot Booked To Raise Legion Funds

Steps to raise funds for another American Legion Junior Baseball League next season will begin on New Year's Day at 12 noon when a turkey shoot will be held at Tuchy's Inn, Conduit road at Cabin John, just behind the firehouse.

Eight teams uniformed and equipped will comprise the circuit with the winner taking part in the inter-city playoffs for a chance to compete in the National Tournament and the "Little World Series." The legion juvenile baseball program has produced a number of stars, including Buddy Lewis, of the Nats, who was graduated from the Gastonia, N. C., team, and Phil Cavaretta, of the National League.

Max and Buddy Baer Get Annuity Policies

San Leandro, Calif., Dec. 29 (AP).—Max Baer, whose brief reign as heavyweight boxing champion was marked by lavish spending and lawsuit money troubles, said today he and his brother, Buddy, signed up annuity policies for themselves as Christmas presents.

Max, who is 28, said his policy will pay $1,000 a month when he is 35.

Crowder Billiard Winner.

Jerry Crowder, by virtue of a run of six, eaked out a 35-32 victory last night from Don Statland in the District amateur three-cushion billiard championship being held at the Royal parlors. In the other contest of the evening J. Murray bounced out a 35-33 win over Frank Masi.

Bred to Run

me on the neck. Jockey Allison chuckled as he dismounted and loosened the belt of my saddle strap.

I held my head high. I gave a loud whinny and secretly hoped that mother, wherever she was, might hear it.

I looked around. The Cigar Man was there, a broad grin on his face. He laughed when I lost, laughed when I won, I mused. Just didn't seem to add up.

Trainer Jensen and the Cigar Man came over to the stable to see me cooled out.

"Looks as if we've hit our stride, eh?" said Trainer Jensen gleefully. "I hope you can make a few more hits. You need them," replied the Cigar Man. Apparently my victory had worn off him quickly.

"That was a pretty fair price at that— $15.10. We probably would have gotten over $20," said Jensen, "if you hadn't wired the tip to that guy in Boston."

"Well, he bet $50 for you and $50 for me. That's a lot of dough. I'll figure it in a little while," said the Cigar Man.

"Yes, he bet a century note for us and probably a thousand for himself," replied Jensen. "I'll wager half the money bet here at the track was sent here by those New England bookmakers who were overloaded."

Trainer Jensen took a slip of paper from his pocket.

"You're going to get in that Philadelphia money and what was layed off in Atlantic City—it'll probably amount to a little over four grand when we get it together," Jensen continued. "You turn it over to The Greek. That will help some, anyway."

They walked away but not before I heard the Cigar Man say, "You and me's going to celebrate tonight. We'll get those two sharp——"

So I had been "used." I liked it.

That night there WAS a crap game in the Holbrook stables.

To Be Continued.

WPA Quintet Tops Police Tourney

Team Enters 2nd Round by Walloping Congress Heights, 25-9.

District WPA cagers, formerly Rinaldi's, forged into the second round of the third annual Police Boys' Club basketball tournament last night at George Washington's gym, walloping Congress Heights, 25-9.

Favored to reach the finals, WPA will engage Delaware & Hudson at 10 o'clock tonight. Bureau of Investigation, defending champions, will meet Jewish Community Center's undefeated team at 9 o'clock.

Seven unlimited teams are left in the battle.

Senate Beer's flashy team upset the Bovello Plumbers, District A. A. U. 145-pound champions, 24-12.

Georgetown Five Stages Practice in New York

New York U. Favored to Beat Georgetown

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Dec. 29.—Working out on the court of the team it will play tomorrow night in Madison Square Garden, Georgetown University's basketball team flashed impressive form today. Booked to meet the fast-stepping New York University five, the Hoyas are to perform in half the double bill to be offered Garden fans.

Coach Freddie Mesmer was highly satisfied with today's passing and shooting session but still believes the Violets should rate the favorites. The game is attracting virtually as much attention as the other half of the double-header in which Stanford's ball hawks from the Pacific Coast meet Long Island U's great team.

The Hilltop management is highly pleased with all arrangements, confident of taking in more than $2,000 as its share of the gate receipts, a record amount for a Washington college basketball team. Approximately 15,000 fans are expected to see the two classics.

The Hoyas are counting strongly on the same aggressiveness which carried them through last year.

Grant, Parker Advance at Bowl Nets

Top-Seeded Players Are in Semifinals in Tennis at New Orleans.

By the Associated Press.

New Orleans, Dec. 29.—Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, top-seeded performer and Frankie Parker, Prep school star from Lawrenceville, N. J., moved into the semifinals of the Sugar Bowl tournament today, Grant easily defeated Ernie Sutter, of New Orleans, national intercollegiate champion, 6-2, 6-1, and Parker overcame Walter Senior, California State champion, 6-2, 6-4.

In the semifinals tomorrow, Grant meets Arthur Hendrix, of Lakeland, Fla., who advanced by eliminating Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., 6-4, 0-6, 6-4.

Parker, seeded No. 2, will meet Martin Boxby, of Miami, Fla., in the semifinals tomorrow. John McDiarmid, of Chicago, seeded No. 3, was upset by Buxby, of Miami, Fla., 6-1, 3-6, 7-5, in a keenly contested match.

Duquesne Works Out Under Miami Sunshine

Miami, Fla., Dec. 29 (AP).—Duquesne's football squad started off with a light workout beneath a warm Florida sun today in preparation for the Orange Bowl game with Mississippi State New Year's Day.

A little concerned over the change in temperature, Coach John Smith ordered a light drill in the morning before an afternoon scrimmage.

Coach Ralph Sasse and his 32 Mississippi players are expected early tomorrow for practice then and Thursday.

office*

For New Year's, delight particular friends with a surprise that is a surprise. Telegraph a bottle or so of Johnnie Walker with your greeting—or unless you may have forgotten somebody at Christmas.

Simply go to the nearest telegraph office and they will attend to the details. Or, if you request, they will get in touch with you and send for your money order. Arrangements have been made for them to see to prompt delivery.

The barriers of time and distance are disposed of by this service. And the cost is surprisingly low. The telegraph office will tell you the exact prices. This service applies to both Johnnie Walker Red Label (8 years old) and Black Label (12 years old).

Of course, for personal use and gifts to nearby friends, your regular liquor dealer has special holiday stocks of "Scotland's most famous whisky."

*Note. Johnnie Walker may be sent, under this service, to most sections of the United States. Of course, where alcoholic beverages may not be legally sold and where local regulations conflict, this service is not available.

Upsets, Dead Heat Feature at Tropical

Voldear Pays A $90.90 Mutuel

Bright Haven, Vote Boy and Peedeeque Also Reward Backers.

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 29 (AP). It will be some time before students of form forget the amazing things that happened at the Gables track this afternoon. By the time Lemar Stock Farm's Merrywood won the featured Marco Purse, fifth on the card, the figure experts were walking around shaking their heads.

Coming on top of the astounding wake-up victory of the $92.10-for-$2-shot Saintlite in the previous day's finale, today's upsets were, in order: Voldear, beaten 13 lengths in his last start, won the first race to pay $90.90; Bright Haven, beaten 14 lengths in his last, won the third race, paying $10.50; Vote Boy, beaten 13 lengths in his last start, won the fourth race, returning $23.50. Then Merrymood, beaten 14 lengths in his last start, won the Marco at $27.10 for $2.

Ira Hanford brought Merrymood home with three lengths to spare over A. G. Weston's Amhurst. Odessa Farm's Lina's Son was third, another three lengths away. The time for the 5½ furlongs was 1:05 2-5.

The second race, won by the second choice, Character, helped very little to soothe the talent.

Pauldron, a recent winner, was installed favorite in the field of one dozen 2-year-olds that contested the Marco. She was outfooted and finished far back, the fifth straight losing choice.

Amhurst, after disposing of Nad in the first quarter mile, had Merrymood to contend with. They raced in close order into the stretch, where Hanford roused Merrymood and the Vito gelding moved clear, ridden out, Lina's Son closed fast to be third.

Voldear, a 2-year-old from G. McNaughton's stable was on top all the way. He entered the stretch three lengths clear and lasted on a hard drive to win by a half-length. He paid $90.90 for $2, the second highest price of the meeting. Saintlite won the nightcap the previous day and paid $92.11. Apprentice Schraudenbach rode Voldear. Mickey's Boy forced all the pace and saved the place by another half-length from Ballot Boy.

Character Pays $5.60.

Trainer Hirsch Jacobs keeps adding to his new American record for winners in a season. The 6-year-old gelding Character, well backed second choice at $6.60 for $2, won the second race by a length, thus boosting the Jacobs' 1936 total to 178. Old Reb was second, a length and a half before Narise. Count Rae, the favorite, was last away and could not menace the leaders. Character and Old Reb had the running between them, with the Jacobs veteran outfinishing the fast but unreliable Old Reb to win going away.

Bright Haven ran like he used to run here in winning the third race. The Sage Stable's veteran led all the way by a wde margin and finished in 1:10 2-5, fastest time of the meeting and only two-fifths of a second slower than the track record. A few days ago the horse drew a heavy play and was beaten off, but today he flew like the wind and never was in danger, scoring by five lengths and paying $10.50. Crowning Glory was second by a length and a half over the favored Reminiscent, which was poorly ridden and unable to keep up.

Apprentice R. Morris, the lad who won Monday's last race on Saintlite at 45 to 1, was astride another upset horse in the 6 furlongs of the fourth contest. He guided Vote Boy, a $23.50 for $2 shot that drew the least play in the race, to a half-length victory.

Peedeeque Wins.

Adding to the deep consternation of favorite players was the photo finish decision in the sixth race which made Peedeeque, a $17.10 for $2 shot, winner over the even money choice, Watch Him. From the stands, it appeared as if Watch Him had lasted to win on the inside, but after lengthy deliberation, the official decision was in favor of Peedeeque. Watch Him made the pace with Peedeeque always in closest attendance. Battling Girl, was third, Daylight behind.

Onlookers again were surprised by the camera finish decision in the seventh. Nell Mac appeared to have won on the inside by a clear nose over Bristle, but the official board flashed the dead heat sign. Behind Me was a poor third. Under the split mutuels pool, Nell Mac paid $7.10, $6.10 and $4.40 across the board, while Bristle's straight, place and show prices were $4.20, $4.40 and $3.30.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—VOLDEAR, $90.90, $32.30, $20.60; MICKEY'S BOY, $5.10, $5.60; BALLOT BOY, $7.70.

VOLDEAR, showing marked speed, was sent to the front with a rush and, rated along gamely, held on to win. MICKEY'S BOY, on the outside all the way, finished fast under weak handling. BALLOT BOY moved up gamely under a weak ride. ROYAL FLIGHT was in close quarters in early part and closed fast when clear. SIR ISAAC ran a fair race. BOB CHARLIE tired badly.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:30. Off at 2:31. Winner, Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' b. g. (6), by Carlaris—Gayoso. Trained by H. Jacobs. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:11 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHARACTER, $6.60, $3.80, $3.50; OLD REB, $7.50, $5.80; NARISE, $6.50.

CHARACTER was eased back off the early pace, began to move up when straightened out in stretch, and finishing with a rush, was going away. OLD REB was sent to the front early, showed speed and held on well. NARISE well up all the way. SUN TEMPEST, on the inside, finished gamely. COUNT RAE lacked speed.

DAILY DOUBLE, FIRST AND SECOND RACES, PAID $413.60.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:58. Off at 2:59½. Winner, Saze Stable's b. h. (5), by Bright Knight—Rock Haven. Trained by J. F. Smith. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:10 2-5.

COULEEDAM	(Cooper)	112	4	6	6	6	6	6	6	8.40

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRIGHT HAVEN, $10.50, $6.10, $4.00; CROWNING GLORY, $10.70, $4.80; REMINISCENT, $2.90.

BRIGHT HAVEN, showing remarkable improvement over recent races, was sent right to the front, opened wide gap and never left the issue in doubt, winning in a common romp. CROWNING GLORY, well up all the way, made a game effort. REMINISCENT was steered all over the race track and finally finished on the outside of the field. VICTORIOUS ANN showed speed for half a mile then tired. COULEEDAM was outrun.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:28. Winner, T. F. Swords' b. g. (4), by Torchilla—Voterina. Trained by G. Mayberry. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:11 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—VOTE BOY, $23.50, $7.80, $4.10; FINISHER, $4.20, $3.00; SILVERETTE, $3.40.

VOTE BOY, displaying a glaring form reversal, broke fast, opened wide gap and stood long drive gamely. FINISHER, on the outside, closed gamely under weak handling. SILVERETTE, well up on the inside, made a game effort. MY COLIN broke slow and lacked speed. GREAT HASTE never a factor. MORE NEWS tired badly after showing early speed.

FIFTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $700. The Marco. For 2-year-olds which have never won two races. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 3:54. Off at 4:00½. Winner, Lemar Stock Farm's br. g. (2), by Vito-Loving Cup. Trained by M. Lowenstein. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:05 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MERRY MOOD, $27.10, $8.70, $5.50; AMHURST, $5.80, $4.30; LINA'S SON, $6.30.

MERRY MOOD moved up very fast on the outside around turn, assumed lead in stretch and drew away at end. AMHURST was rushed into lead soon after the start, displayed keen speed and held on well. LINA'S SON slipped through on inside and closed gamely. EARLY SETTLER broke slow, circled field and was a fast-going fourth. NAD ran good race and is worth noting. PAULDRON was outrun.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and a furlong. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:23. Off at 4:24. Winner, H. Sokol's ch. g. (5), by Vespasian—Alma Ata. Trained by B. Evans. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:52 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PEEDEEQUE, $17.10, $6.80, $4.50; WATCH HIM, $4.10, $3.30; BATTLING GIRL, $4.40.

PEEDEEQUE broke good, was allowed to gallop along back of the pace to the final furlong, where he closed fast and gained the photo decision. WATCH HIM opened a wide gap and rated along, saved ground and appeared to have lasted to win. BATTLING GIRL closed ground gamely. ANHELATION ran good race and can win in cheaper company. FLYING DERE had no mishap. MY PETER needed this race to put him on edge.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $700; claiming. For maiden 3-year-olds and upward. Start bad. Won driving. Went to post at 4:53. Off at 4:57. Winners' breeding: A. and J. W. Peterson, Jr.'s Nell Mac, ch. f. (3), by Sir Barton—Nell McDonald. Trained by J. Everman, and E. T. Burke's Bristle, br. g. (3), by Display—Broom Market. Trained by B. Blume. Value to winners (first and second moneys split), $312.50, $312.50; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:41.

†Dead heat.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NELL MAC, $7.10, $6.10, $4.40; BRISTLE, $4.20, $4.40, $3.30. BEHIND ME, $3.90.

NELL MAC and BRISTLE ran a dead heat. NELL MAC broke good, assumed command early, saved ground and appeared to have won by a good nose. BRISTLE was hard ridden all the way, closed ground, but appeared to have finished second. BEHIND ME had no mishap. ARTFUL PRINCE ran a fair race. STEP ASIDE went in the air at the start and never had a chance. He pulled up lame.

EIGHTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $700; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward, which has not won since December 12. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:28. Off at 5:29. Winner, J. W. Barnes' b. f. (4), by Broom—Kenilla. Trained by L. V. Bellew, jr. Value to winner, $525; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:39 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CONTRAST, $21.80, $8.50, $5.70; SIR ROSE, $4.80, $4.10; PRETTY LASS, $7.90.

CONTRAST, showing marked improvement over recent races, moved up very fast turning out of backstretch, raced SIR ROSE into defeat and won going away. SIR ROSE had more early speed than usual, set fast pace, but tired suddenly. PRETTY LASS came around field and closed gamely. A. O'CONNELL slipped through on inside and ran good race. GUNWALE followed pace for half a mile then quit badly. He ran a poor race.

Miss Ginbar Is Winner In $2,000 Plater Race

New Orleans, Dec. 29 (AP).—Miss Ginbar, a 3-year-old filly owned by E. N. Thompson, moved up a notch in class today and won her second straight race in accounting for the 6-furlong dash styled for 2,000 platers at the Fair Grounds.

As an outsider in the betting, Miss Ginbar paid $14.40. She was clocked in 1:13 1-5.

with Bill Bennings.

Selections at Tropical Park.

Dear Al:

Word has come to me that Jockey Herbert Lindberg has a verbal agreement with trainer Big Jim Healey to ride for John Hay Whitney this winter. The victory of Saintlike was being investigated by the stewards yesterday. Trainer Philip Bieber and Jockeys R. Hightshoe and R. Watson were "on the carpet" as the boys call it. Bieber is the trainer of the longshot. Hightshoe rode Treasure Ship, the short-priced favorite in the same race. He also had the mount on Joyride, another favorite which ran a dull race. A Benningite has written in about a parlay. He said that the second horse was scratched and the first lost. He also asks, "Can the bookmaker collect?" I don't know about that. In betting a parlay if one horse is scratched, the money goes on the single horse that runs. If the single horse loses, then the bettor loses. Some bookies have their own rules on the subject, but the way I have tried to explain seems to be "official" in this section of the country. Clocker Mike must have a girl friend. A female voice laid me out over the phone this morning for telling that innocent little story about Mike's school days.

BILL.

First Race—Balance Step is a fair sort of maiden and seems to have found the spot that should bring a set of brackets. Shares top weight with Loyal Son, another which should make a good showing. Whittle has had many chances and is dangerous because of experience.

Second Race—Aunt Flor and Primer appear ready to battle it out for the chief award in this field. The mare has a shade the best of it in my book. Prince Sulieman should take care of one of the money positions.

Third Race—Quickly gets in action here with only 102 pounds, thanks to the apprentice allowance and I'm looking forward to a victory. I've been waiting a long time for Paisey Begone's real race. This may be the day. Kerry Patch for the show end.

Fourth Race—Rafter is the probable favorite and the probable winner in this field. Hightshoe will do the riding. Sir Randolph has failed me but he is fit and has worked well. Telling You has a money chance.

Fifth Race—Mama's Choice, a winner here and Jinnee, which ran a good second last out, appear best in this mile and a furlong test. Light Brook, despite the weight assignment, is a threat off some races.

Sixth Race—Espinaca has tossed with as good as these and I'm not looking further for the winner. Melody Maid is as good as that recent win and figures to do the chief chasing. Synod is a possible surprise.

Seventh Race—Top High and Stone Martin are my choices in this. They are a pair of hard-running veterans. Busby awoke recently and may be even better than that race.

Eighth Race—Drusus, Hot Cake and Boocap is the way I prefer them in the day's finale.

Best Bet—Espinaca.

Trade Volume Climbs Back to 75% of Normal

Production, Rising Faster, Is Now Only 18% Under Normal.

New York, Dec. 29.—The total volume of trade, including production, distribution and financial activity, adjusted for normal long-term growth and seasonal variations, has risen to about 25 per cent below the estimated normal level from the low point of 46 per cent below normal in March, 1933, according to the monthly business survey of the National Industrial Conference Board.

Productive activity has advanced more rapidly than the total volume of trade. Production has regained roughly 55 per cent of the depression decline and now stands at a point about 18 per cent below the estimated normal level. Recovery has been least impressive in the financial field, where issuance of new securities is still lagging behind improvement in production and distribution.

Output of producers' goods has recovered 58 per cent of the 1929-32 decline, and recovery in consumers' goods output has amounted to 54.3 per cent of the 1929-33 decline. It has often been stated that no lasting recovery could be expected until the producers' goods industries caught up with the improvement in the consumers' goods industries. This has now occurred, and the result is a better balanced recovery. No longer can the cyclical rise be characterized as a "consumers' goods recovery."

There has been a fairly steady, though not a sharp, recovery in both residential and non-residential construction since the depression low points were reached early in 1933. Total building awards in the first 11 months of 1936, as reported by F. W. Dodge Corporation, amounted to $2,475.6 million. This compared with $1,580.4 million in the corresponding months of 1935 and with a low of $1,255.7 million for the entire year of 1933.

$100,000,000 Bills 2.58 Times Subscribed

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announces that the tenders for two series of Treasury bills, to be dated December 30, 1936, which were offered on December 24, have been opened at the Federal Reserve banks.

Tenders were invited for the two series to the aggregate amount of $100,000,000, or thereabouts, and $258,736,000 was applied for, of which $100,073,000 was accepted.

B. & O. Carloadings.

Carloadings on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for the week ended December 26 totaled 42,465. By comparison with the same week of last year this was an increase of 11,757.

Oil Output Drops 11,727 Barrels a Day

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 29 (AP).—The Oil and Gas Journal reported today a drop of 11,727 barrels daily in the Nation's production of crude oil for the week ended December 26, bringing the total daily output to 3,125,613 barrels.

Oklahoma's production dropped 1,775 barrels daily to 595,600. East Texas increased 113 barrels to 450,911 and all Texas increased 463 barrels daily to 1,216,849. Louisiana decreased 1,010 barrels to 240,335. California increased 14,000 barrels to 580,000 and Kansas rose 2,550 barrels to 176,150.

Business Failures.

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Business failures in the United States last week declined to 162 compared with 172 the preceding week and 170 in the corresponding 1935 period, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. Insolvencies with liabilities of $5,000 or more totaled 99 for the five-day business week, against 101 the week before and 95 in the 1935 period.

Extra, Higher Dividends and Wage Increase

May Stores Vote an Extra, New England Utility Increases Rate.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 29.—May Department Stores Co., operating units in St. Louis, Baltimore, Cleveland, Akron, Denver and Los Angeles, announced today an extra dividend of $1.25 a share on its common stock, payable January 20 to holders of record January 9.

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 29 (AP).—The Southern New England Telephone Co. declared an increased quarterly dividend of $1.75 on the capital stock. The dividend is payable January 15, 1937, to stockholders of record December 31, 1936. Since April, 1933, when quarterly dividends were reduced from $2, payments of $1.50 have been made.

Peoria, Ill., Dec. 29 (AP).—All employes, except the administrative personnel and department heads, received a 5 per cent wage increase, B. C. Heacock, president of the Caterpillar Traction Co., announced today. The raise, effective January 3, affected 11,000 persons. Heacock said wages in the plant now were substantially higher than the 1929 level.

United Air Lines Hold Traffic Record

Chicago, Dec. 29.—United Air Lines, by transporting 223,000 revenue passengers for a total of 106,000,000 revenue passenger-miles, 2,340,000 pounds of air express and 6,000,000 pounds of air mail in 1936, retained its position, according to officials of the company, of flying more passenger plane-miles and traffic ton-miles than any air line in the world.

This traffic, with December estimated, was a 26 per cent increase in revenue passengers, 23 per cent in revenue passenger-miles, 35 per cent in air express and 17 per cent in air mail over 1935.

Lumber Shipments 57 Per Cent of 1929

The lumber industry during the week ended December 18 stood at 56 per cent of the 1929 weekly average of production and 57 per cent of 1929 shipments. Reported new business was somewhat below the preceding week, which, however, was not only the peak week of 1936, but the highest for orders reported since November, 1933.

Orders booked in the week ended December 19 were 38 per cent above output and 30 per cent above orders of a year ago. Production and shipments are still restricted by the maritime strike.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Irregular in Heavier Trading; Commodities Have Setback; Dollars Firm.

New York, Dec. 29.—With trading volume a little larger than the recent daily totals of around 2,000,000 shares, stock prices moved irregularly. The tone appeared to be a little firmer than it was yesterday, but no definite trend appeared. It was the last day for tax selling at regular delivery, a fact which probably increased the volume of belated sales for that purpose. May wheat closed ⅝ of a cent lower at 134⅝ cents a bushel.

Striking and rumors of strikes helped to thicken the atmosphere surrounding the securities markets, but their influence did not appear to be considerable, except as affecting the prices of a few securities. Case Threshing, for example, dropped a few points more, but General Motors, now facing a strike at its Fisher Body plant and selected for the target of a union labor drive, was no worse than most of the market leaders. It is traditional with stock traders that strike news offers a risky base for selling operations, but the cumulative effect of the various drives toward higher wages and shorter hours, in and out of Congress, is to lift manufacturing costs to say nothing of the strike expenses.

What the stockholders will have to determine will be how far the subsequent price increases will hold back consumption. In such times the shares of companies which have a small ratio of labor costs to total costs usually are favored, unless they are caught on the other end of rapidly rising raw materials costs. On the commodity side the day brought declines in most of the recently buoyant groups, probably less because of any fundamental change in conditions than because of profit taking among the speculators who have flocked to the pickings. Copper was an exception, a further hardening in the foreign price being reported, and wheat rallied.

Credit Control.

The flourish with which the Treasury announced its first operation in its gold sterilization scheme caused little stir, as the affair was merely notice that the bookkeeping incidental to the change in handling gold imports had begun. What would be more to the point would be some indication that gold imports had been stopped through the natural working forces that would be set in motion were our budget to be balanced, were trade restrictions eased, and were less effort made to hold down the exchange value of dollars vis-a-vis other currencies. Dollars strengthened a little today.

Meanwhile it was estimated that refinancing in the first quarter of next year would reach two billions. It is quite likely that corporations standing to gain anything from the substitution of low coupon bonds for high ones will make hay while the cheap money sun shines, but no great stirring yet is visible in the borrowing of fresh capital. All that has taken place in that line is small and costly for the purpose of offsetting disbursements to comply with the penalty tax law. Extensive refunding by corporations is a bullish influence on most stocks, as the savings thereby gained will do something to offset rising costs in other directions.

Building and Oil Stocks Rise.

Stocks were erratic throughout. The building group was the only one to show much consistency. Price hardening was the rule in that sector, being pronounced in Johns-Manville and United States Gypsum. American Radiator was firm to strong. Most of the oil shares moved higher on the constant hardening of crude oil prices and the belief that next year will be another record breaker for gasoline consumption. Possibly the outlook for improvement in building and oil shares, and the comparative lack of speculative activity earlier in the year, gave them more relief from tax selling than was the case with other groups.

Steel shares acted better, but they got nowhere in particular, and began poorly. Buying of airplanes continued under the urge of war demand. Rails had moments of firmness, but found new buyers scantily interested. Metals were irregular. Motor shares looked a trifle easier, hurt by strike news and the talk of some reduction in activity in the next month or two. The majority of the standard issues which usually set the market pace were about evenly divided with fractional gains and losses. Among more volatile issues the declines were in the majority. Auburn, Case and McKeesport were easily cast down.

Capital Gains Tax.

The latest report is that the capital gains tax is to be made a flat levy of 10 per cent, with elimination of losses altogether, which is unfair, but likely to save some tax receipts for the Treasury. Among the securities that have met with tax selling lately have been bank stocks. They are not only well under their highs of the year but in many instances below the levels at which they sold at the close of 1935. They rallied this afternoon.

Business Borrowing.

Further expansion of commercial loans, which rose to a new high record for the recovery, and seasonal shrinkage in deposits and in reserves created mainly by outflows of Christmas currency, were the highlights of the condition figures for member banks in 101 cities as of December 23. In addition to the $32,000,000 expansion in commercial lonas of New York banks, shown in the statement issued last Thursday, there was an increase in this item of $14,000,000 in Chicago and $10,000,000 in Cleveland, the total for all the banks rising $58,000,000. The increase from a year ago is now $885,000,000. Reserves were down $146,000,000 and demand deposits adjusted were off $51,000,000. Deposits of banks were lower by $113,000,000 while amounts due from banks on the asset side of the statement decreased $112,000,000. The net decrease of $20,000,000 in Government securities and of $16,000,000 in other securities were wholly produced by the operations of New York banks. Loans to banks were up $21,000,000 and "borrowings" were up $26,000,000 in the New York district, these items reflecting several transactions in Federal funds, which in turn suggested that some banks were made short in reserves by the currency outflow.

Window Dressing.

This week's report for member banks showing a drop in holdings of Government and other securities probably reflects year end window dressing by some of the banks. Banks still like to show lots of cash on hand. Banks this year apparently have done their trimming in good time, and it is said the market is now relieved of such selling, something which probably accounted for the firmer tendency in Government bond prices yesterday and especially today.

Stock Seat $129,000, Advance of $4,000

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Another advance in the price of stock exchange memberships was announced today with arrangements for transfer of a seat for $129,000, up $4,000 from the last transaction. The low for the year was established on December 1 at $89,000. A sale at $174,000 on February 19 marked the peak for 1936.

Armour Sales For 1936 Make Six-Year Peak

Total $748,935,218, With 74 Cents a Share Net on Common.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—With the biggest sales volume since 1930, Armour & Co. increased its profit during the fiscal year ending October 31 to $10,184,492, compared with $9,348,678 in 1935. Net profit in 1934 was $10,560,618.

This profit, disclosed today in the packing company's annual report, was equivalent to approximately 74 cents per share on the outstanding common stock after privision for all preferred stock dividends. Earnings on the common the previous year were about 57 cents.

Sales volume totaled $784,935,218, an increase of 9.7 per cent compared with the preious year and surpassing all previous years since 1930, when the volume exceeded $900,000,000. Tonnage gained 10.8 per cent.

Armour & Co. of Delaware and its subsidiary companies, which, in addition to domestic packing business include South American, fertilizer and leather operations, contributed $7,458,311 to the consolidated net profit, compared with $7,765,362 the previous year. As a result of the voiding of the hog processing tax, $4,583,341 was credited back to the profit and loss account, this being the net amount of the unpaid tax for two months from the beginning of the fiscal year to the date of the court's decision.

Net working capital declined $941,083 during the year to $112,291,219. Surplus increased from $49,005,267 to $52,744,455.

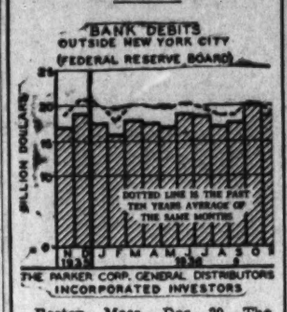
Federal Debt Double 1930 Post-War Low



Boston, Mass., Dec. 29.—The Federal debt continues its "step-ladder" performance. Since the post-war low point in 1930 the Federal debt has more than doubled, while State and local debts throughout the country have increased 9 per cent, according to the National Industrial Conference Board.

Thermoid Issue Offered Today

5 Per Cent Collateral Trust Bonds Are Priced at 100 Per Cent.

A new issue of $2,450,000 first lien collateral trust 5 per cent bonds of the Thermoid Co. is being offered today at 100 per cent and interest by Van Alstyne, Noel & Co., Inc., Fenner & Beane, Schluter & Co., Inc., and James M. Johnston & Co., Washington.

Each $1,000 bond will have attached three warrants for the purchase of ten shares of common stock, exercisable at $8, $12 and $16 a share.

Net proceeds from the sale will be applied toward the payment of outstanding extended 6 per cent notes due February 1, 1937; for balance of purchase money mortgage on property both in Trenton, N J, and against current indebtedness of Thermoid Rubber Co, a subsidiary.

The company is one of the country's largest manufacturers of automobile brake lining, supplying about 20 per cent of the estimated requirements for asbestos brake linings. The company also makes velvet, wool and worsted pile fabric floor coverings suitable for use in automobiles.

Copper for Export At Six-Year High

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Sales of copper for export were made today at 11.90-11.925 cents a pound, a new high mark since June, 1930.

Yesterday's sales were at around 11.85 cents.

Wheat Prices Decline With Winnipeg Drop

Export Buying of Canadian Wheat a Weakening Influence.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Winnipeg price tumbles amounting at times to 2¾ cents did much to force the Chicago wheat market backward late today, and more than cancel gains. Considerable selling of wheat in Chicago was attributed to Winnipeg sources. Messages from Winnipeg said lack of any substantial new export buying of Canadian wheat was a weakening influence.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ½ to 1 cent under yesterday's finish, May 1.34½ to 1.34⅝, September 1.15. Corn ⅞ off to ½ up, May new, 1.06¼ to 1.06⅜, July new 1.02¾ to 1.02⅞, September 99⅜. Oats ¼-½ down, May 50⅛, and rye at 1¼-1½ decline, May 1.15. Provisions results were 2 cents to 12 cents lower.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE United States, for the District of Columbia, holding a Bankruptcy Court. In the matter of Erskine H. Rupp, 5110 Fifth street northwest, Washington, D. C., Bankrupt. In Bankruptcy No. 3441. To the creditors of Erskine H. Rupp, of the City of Washington, District of Columbia. Notice is hereby given that on the 28th day of December, 1936, the said Erskine H. Rupp was duly adjudicated bankrupt, and that the first meeting of his creditors will be held at my office in the Investment Building, Fifteenth and K streets northwest, Washington, D. C., on the 12TH DAY OF JANUARY, 1937, at TWO O'CLOCK P. M., at which time the said creditors may attend, prove their claims (claims shall not be proved against the bankrupt estate subsequent to six months after the adjudication as stated above), appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupt and transact such other business as may properly come before said meeting. FRED J. EDEN, Referee in Bankruptcy.

Official Notices

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION and Review, District Building, Washington, D. C., December 30, 1936.—In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of August 14, 1894, and amendments thereto, the Board of Equalization and Review will be in session in the District Building (Room 105) from and after the first Monday in January, 1937, until and including the first Monday in June, 1937, for the purpose of hearing and determining such complaints as may be made in respect to the new assessment of real property in said District. The books containing the returns of said assessment are open to public inspection and can be seen at the office of the board between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 3 o'clock p. m. of each secular day. To insure due consideration all complaints should be filed at the earliest possible date. The law requires that the equalization and review shall be completed as nearly as practicable on the first Monday in June, 1937, after which date no other complaints as to valuations will be received, and when approved by the Commissioners, the assessments will constitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding period of one year and until another valuation is made according to law. Blank forms for making complaints can be had on application. F. D. ALLEN, Assessor and Chairman of the Board of Equalization and Review.

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL BOARD, Washington, D. C., December 30, 1936. Notice is hereby given that the following persons have applied for licenses in the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, that remonstrants are entitled to be heard before the granting of such licenses on January 14, 1937, at 10 A. M., in Room 219, District Building. Fifteenth and K streets northwest. Washington, D. C., on the 12TH DAY OF JANUARY, 1937, at TWO O'CLOCK P. M., at which time the said creditors may attend, prove their claims (claims shall not be proved against the bankrupt estate subsequent to six months after the adjudication as stated above), appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupt and transact such other business as may properly come before said meeting. FRED J. EDEN, Referee in Bankruptcy.

Official Notices

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION and Review, District Building, Washington, D. C., December 30, 1936.—In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of August 14, 1894, and amendments thereto, the Board of Equalization and Review will be in session in the District Building (Room 105) from and after the first Monday in January, 1937, until and including the first Monday in June, 1937, for the purpose of hearing and determining such complaints as may be made in respect to the new assessments of real property in said District. The books containing the returns of said assessment are open to public inspection and can be seen at the office of the board between the hours of 9 o'clock a. m. and 3 o'clock p. m. of each secular day. To insure due consideration all complaints should be filed at the earliest possible date. The law requires that the equalization and review shall be completed as nearly as practicable on the first Monday in June, 1937, after which date no other or further complaints as to valuations will be received, and when approved by the Commissioners, the assessments will constitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding period of one year and until another valuation is made according to law. Blank forms for making complaints can be had on application. F. D. ALLEN, Assessor and Chairman of the Board of Equalization and Review.
